Restoration Of Pay Cut Threatened With Veto

Senate Vote Continues Slash on Higher Salaries.

Action Plunges Issue in Doubt

House Democrats Meet Tonight to Seek Settlement.

What the Government intends to do about the restoration of the 15 per cent pay reduction for its employes was thrown into doubt by a high-riding Senate yesterday.

The Senate pushed to passage the independent offices appropriations bill carrying provisiions for pay restoration and increased benefits to veterans but it was warned by Administration leaders that President Roosevelt probably would veto the bill.

The veto threat was aimed principally at the provisions for increased veterans' benefits but nevertheless the one important pay amendment sponsored by Senator William E. Borah (Republican), of Idaho, and voted favorable yesterday, may work to upset the full restoration program sponsored by Senator Patrick F. McCarran (Democrat), of Nevada. The McCarran rider was tacked on the bill last week by a vote of 41 to 40.

Pay Amendment.

Borah's amendment provided that the 15 per cent pay slash shall be continued for Government employes receiving more than $6,000 a year. That will include all Congressmen as well as legislative and executive employes. Federal judges are excepted.

Meantime, House Democrats have been called into session tonight to consider the situation. Speaker Henry T. Rainey, of Illinois, and Representative Joseph W. Byrns, of Tennessee, Democratic floor leader refuse to predict the outcome of the meeting.

Refusal of leaders of the majority party to forecast what will be done at the meeting was indicative of the doubt which has been thrown about the apparently settled question of Government pay.

House Plans Changed.

Adoption of the Borah amendment is expected to change the whole tactical program of the pay restorationists. It had been planned when the bill was formally received from the Senate by the House to move a concurrence in the Senate amendment restoring full pay effective July 1 and 5 per cent effective February 1. Other Senate amendments were to be discussed in conference.

The whole question is likely to be thrown into conference because of the Borah amendment. Restorationists on the one hand and Administration leaders on the other were running around mental circles yesterday with a majority of the House undecided what would be the best thing to do.

Without the Borah amendment,

4 Thugs Slay Bank Employe

Kansas City Machine Gun Bandits Escape With $200,000 Loot.

Kansas City, Feb. 27 (AP).—Four machine-gun bandits killed L. Webster Kemner, a bank messenger of the Commerce Trust Co., seized $1,000 in cash and $190,000 in securities on a downtown street and fled in a motor car today.

Most of the securities were reported to be negotiable.

Kemner was on his way on foot to the postoffice when he was slain. He was followed at a short distance by a guard, Bayle Swafford, armed with a machine gun.

Three bandits leaped out of a car. Two of them rushed Swafford and prevented him using his weapon.

A third seized Kemner, who attempted to flee, and was shot through the heart.

Some witnesses said the fourth bandit at the wheel of the motor car was a woman.

Papal Title Given To Bar Nazi Arrest

Munich, Germany, Feb. 27 (AP). To forestall his possible arrest by some zealous subordinate Nazi, the title of papal legate was conferred upon Cardinal Michael Faulhaber today by Pope Pius.

The title Papal legate carries diplomatic immunity from arrest for the distinguished Prince of the Roman Catholic Church whose sermons against paganism and in defense of the Old Testament have made him a target for attack by Nazis.

Cardinal Faulhaber's pre-Christmas sermons on the Old Testament, which now have appeared in pamphlet form, are, in the opinion of newsstand and book shop vendors, among the season's best sellers.

Clutch of Rasputin On Czarists Revealed

Princess Charges Film About "Mad Monk" Libels Character.

London, Feb. 27 (U.P.).—The clutch which Rasputin, "mad monk," had on the exotic life and fates of highest figures in the last days of the Czarist regime, was revealed in court here today.

The fantastic tale was unfolded during testimony by Princess Irina Alexandrovina, niece of the last Czar, during the opening session of her suit against Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, film company. She charged libel in a film they produced and declared on the stand that she never had met Rasputin, allegedly depicted as her lover in a picture shown in Britain by the American concern.

The princess, wife of Prince Youssoupoff, who killed the monk, charges in her suit that she was partrayed as "Princess Natasha," who was the sweetheart of Rasputin in the film.

She admitted that Rasputin had great power in the court of the late Czar Nicholas II, her uncle, by his ability to cure the young czarevitch, "which no physician in Europe was able to do." But she declared he used strange herbs from Asia to influence the health of the youth, making him "well," or ill at his own disposition.

Open Austria To Hapsburgs, Fascist Plea

Heimwehr Prince Asserts Monarchy Restoration Is Premature.

(Copyright, 1934, by the Associated Press.)

Vienna, Feb. 27.—Prince Ernst Rudiger von Staremberg, commander of the powerful Fascist Heimwehr, declared today that laws banishing the Hapsburgs from Austria and confiscating their property must be repealed.

The question of a possible Hapsburg monarchy restoration, however, "is almost impossible to answer while we are in the midst of our reconstruction work, particularly because we are not sure it could be kept a purely Austrian question," he said.

He emphasized repeatedly that he and Chancellor Engelbert Dollfuss are in full agreement and that "we stand or fall together"—thereby disposing of any suspicion that he wanted to become dictator.

The prince, Dollfuss' right-hand man, denied extra precautions were being taken along the Austrian frontiers.

"If it should become necessary to safeguard the frontier," he said, "Heimwehr troops would, of course, be rushed in that direction, but personally I do not anticipate this necessity.

"The name Hapsburg," he went on, "is an idea, a conception which affects Europe beyond Austria's borders.

"Therefore, the problem of restoring the Hapsburg dynasty must be approached with caution. It is not yet possible to say whether it would be desirable."

His remarks were made at a reception for newspaper correspondents.

In reply to a question whether the establishment of a monarchy is contemplated, with a regent ruling until a Hapsburg is ripe for discussion, Prince von Starhemberg said:

"It is too early to discuss that, too. Offhand, it may seem simple to establish a regency similar to that in Hungary, but the situations in Austria and Hungary are not similar.

"For the time being it is unimportant whether we have a president of a regent. The only important thing is the direction in

Bride Resigns; Counsel Post To Prettyman

Attack on Political Record Succeeds, New Job Proposed.

By J. D. Secrest.

The political ax which has been hovering over several District department heads fell yesterday on Corporation Counsel William W. Bride, who tendered his resignation.

Almost immediately, the political plum was handed to E. Barrett Prettyman, a resident of Chevy Chase, Md., and recently general counsel of the Bureau of Internal Revenue. The change will be effective March 15.

Announcement of Bride's resignation and Prettyman's appointment was made by the District Commissioners shortly after a visit to the White House. The visit had been preceded, it is understood, by calls from Democratic patronage dispensers and by a visit from Bride himself, who made a last-minute effort to clear his party record.

Politics Only Open Charge.

The only open charge against Bride was that he has not been a loyal Democrat since 1928. In fact, he is charged by his political enemies with being a Republican, because of listings in "Who's Who" and a $100 contribution to the Hoover campaign in 1928.

Bride, officially silent in the face of charges made on the House floor by Representative Wright Patman (Democrat), Texas, and others, and in pamphlets circulated by Joseph P. Tumulty, former secretary to President Wilson, has indicated that he may have something to say after he relinquishes office.

The ouster of Bride culminates a campaign waged by Patman, Tumulty and others for more than a year. For a while it appeared to have been defeated, but within recent weeks is gained strength and the resignation came as no surprise.

Bride is the third District department head to feel the pressure of politics. George S. Wilson, public welfare director, who has long been

New Orleans, Feb. 27 (U.P.).—Eleven persons were safe today after spending a night in three disabled boats on Lake Pontchartrain and Lake Borgne near here.

Jimmy Wedell, ace aviator, located two of the missing fishing parties yesterday. He made ten flights. Storms caught the fishing parties Sunday. Searches were directed to the groups after Wedell had located them.

Tra-la! Sprig's Near, BUT— It'll Be 5 Above Here Today

March is coming in like a lamb; the cherry blossoms are going to bloom on time, and the mercury is going down to 5 degrees this morning.

As one of the coldest Februarys on record in Washington and most of the Atlantic States closes, the Weather Bureau promised cheering news.

A slowly rising temperature today will continue, and before the end of the week, Washington will be basking in a temperature "considerably warmer."

With the weather man's warning prophecy, there came also a cheery forecast about the cherry blossoms. Albert Clyde-Burton, assistant superintendent of National Capital Parks, said the blooms would probably climax around Easter, April 1.

The trees have suffered none at all, he said, and added that they might have gained some increased potency of bloomnig because of the rigors of the winter, which will probably prevent a too-early blossoming.

While computations are not yet complete, the Weather Bureau stated that this month will have been one of the coldest Februarys in Washington. But it is not believed that it will set a new record.

The month also will approach but not equal snowfall records for Washington, it was said at the bureau.

The warm spell, which the weather man says will begin with today's slowly rising temperature, may bring slight danger of a flooded Potomac, it was said.

However, the forecaster said he did not think the water would be dangerously high, because, despite the amount of snow, the total precipitation has been less than normal and the surrounding country is far from being saturated.

The latest cold wave and snowfall was due to a high pressure area which surged down from the Northwest upon Washington and the rest

Brown Given Protection, Probe Told

Witness Charges Lines Not to Attack Him in Congress.

Deal 'Sour,' Smacked of Conspiracy, Former Operator Says.

By Martha Dalrymple.

Assurance from Republican leaders in Congress that former Postmaster General Brown would not be attacked in Congress for his air mail contract awards was the price paid by Western Air Express for its share in the transcontinental line awarded to the Transcontinental and Western Air, according to testimony heard yesterday by the Senate Mail Contract Investigating Committee.

The witness, James G. Woolly, former vice president of Western Air, further explained that the whole deal whereby Western Air merged with Transcontinental Air Transport looked so "sour" to him that he "got out in a hurry."

This evidence was presented at the end of a long day of Republican defense examination of Brown himself and cross-examination of Karl Crowley, Postoffice Department solicitor, on whose recommendations the recent contract cancellation was ordered.

Rebidding Bill Framed.

Meanwhile the House Postoffice Committee had drafted a bill which would permit lines whose contracts were cancelled to rebid for the mail routes. It would also provide a flat rate of two mills per pound per mile, with a maximum of 50 cents per mile per plane.

Woolly, big, loud-voiced Californian, took the stand late in the afternoon after spectators had given up hopes of any fireworks. Speaking so rapidly that the stenographer had to stop him occasionally, Woolly related in detail the story of the "deal that looked pretty bad to me."

At the urgent request of Harris M. Hanshue, president of Western Air, Woolly said that he talked to former Senator Smoot, of Utah, at the time one of the high-ranking Republican leaders in the Senate, and former Representative Tilson, then Republican leader of the House of Representatives, telling them of Brown's desire that no attack be made on him in either body as a result of his contract award. Both Republican legislators, said Woolly, wrote letters to Brown giving him such assurance.

"And 48 hours later we had the contract," he said. "And I got out. I didn't like it a bit. It looked plenty like conspiracy to me."

It was further revealed that Ernest W. Smoot, son of the former Senator, employed as Washington representative before Comptroller General McCarl and Congressional Appropriations Committees for Western Air Express, had rendered a bill for $15,000.

Bill Is Introduced.

Senator Black (Democrat), Alabama, chairman of the committee, introduced the letter written by young Smoot to Hanshue in which he said:

"I am inclosing my bill for the specific services you instructed me on December 13 to perform in Washington.

"Both of these projects, the de-

McGee, Bucketshop Character, Is Dead

Identity in Hospital Hid Under Assumed Name.

New York, Feb. 27 (AP).—Death divulged the secret of William F. McGee, whose name made headlines in the heydey of the bucket shop a decade ago.

Penniless, McGee died in a hospital last night, under an assumed name. It was not until police checked fingerprints today that he was identified as the man who went to prison with Edward M. Fuller back in 1927 as the result of a flamboyant bucket shop trial.

Police records said he was wanted in Chicago in a "marriage racket," and also in Waukegan, Ill.

Friends are said to have sent an appeal to Chicago asking his former wife, Louise Groody, actress, for funds to bury him.

Turkey Sends Servant Girl to Die for Murder

Ankara, Turkey, Feb. 27 (AP).—A pretty servant girl, Aiche Hanim, of Adana, 22, was condemned to death today—the second woman in the history of Turkey to be ordered to the gallows.

The Kemalist government's criminal court found her guilty of murdering her mistress and the latter's son by mixing poison with honey. The court of appeals, ruling that Moslem women should be secluded in prison rather than publicly hanged, invalidated the verdict, but the criminal court reconfirmed the sentence.

Senate Votes Veteran Aid And Full Pay

Administration Leaders Powerless; Annual Cost Is 350 Millions.

Presidential Veto Held Certain; Cash Bonus Clause Beaten.

By Franklyn Waltman, Jr.

With Administration leaders powerless to do more than predict a Presidential veto, the Senate yesterday adopted the independent offices appropriation bill with amendments liberalizing veterans' compensation and restoring the Federal pay cut that will cost in the neighborhood of an additional $350,000,000 annually.

The measure was sent back to the House for concurrence in the Senate amendments dealing with veterans' compensation and Federal pay. The opinion seemed general that the House would accept in substance the Senate amendments on these points, unless the President personally threatens a veto, as he did yesterday for Patman bonus bill.

Democratic Leader Joseph W. Byrns summoned House Democrats to a party conference to be held tonight to determine what should be done about the Senate amendments. Unless the House modifies the Senate amendments, a Presidential veto appears certain.

Economy in Name Only.

Should the independent offices bill, with the Senate amendments in it, become law, the economy act passed last March would, for all practical purposes, be emasculated. Of $650,000,000 in annual savings estimated as effected by that measure, only $176,000,000 would remain. In other words, in less than one year $474,000,000 of the economies would have been overthrown.

Even though in the end the Administration has its way without further compromise, the economy act savings will be greatly dissipated because the Roosevelt spokesmen in the Senate have accepted veterans' and pay-cut proposals which would cost more than $220,000,000 annually.

In final consideration of the independent offices bill, the Senate rejected, 24 to 64, a proposal giving the President power to pay immediately the World War veterans' bonus due in 1945. This vote, however, could not be taken as an accurate test of the strength of bonus advocates in the Senate, since many of the latter voted "no" in order not to give the President further excuse for vetoing the bill.

$6,000 Brackets Excepted.

As the Senate voted down the bonus proposal, Speaker Henry T. Rainey made public an informal note to him from President Roosevelt, in which the latter stated he would veto the bonus bill, if Congress passed it. There were conflicting opinions as to whether this statement lessened possibilities that a majority of the House on March 12 would vote for the bonus bill.

The only step taken by the Senate against general liberalization of veterans' and Federal pay provisions came near the end of the de-

Whoops, My Deah! Men (?) Now Jam The Beauty Shops

Omaha, Nebr., Feb. 27 (AP).—Male customers are flocking to the beauty parlors for their permanents, Miss Marie Callahan, of Chicago, editor of a beauty trade magazine, today told delegates at the Trans-Mississippi Beauty Show and convention.

"The situation of ten years ago, when the influx of women into the men's barber shops constituted a worry to the barbers is now being reversed. Beauticians are now worrying about how they can take care of their regular women customers along with the increasing numbers of male customers.

"Even Kansas cow-punchers visit beauty salons every spring and fall, just before the roundups."

Prison Camp Captain Relieved in Slaying

Tallahassee, Fla., Feb. 27 (AP).—The State prison bureau today said it had requested Murray Sams, State's attorney in Volusia County, to investigate the killing of Sam Logan, colored convict, in a prison camp at Deland last week.

The bureau said it had requested the State road department to relieve Capt. H. M. Thomas, now in charge of the camp, pending the investigation. Thomas told a jury he fired the shot that killed Logan.

Drastic Code Revision Promised by Johnson; NRA Failures Flayed

Open NRA Criticism Conference

Promotes Monopoly, Is Claim of Witness at National Hearing.

Living Standards Declared Lowered

Automotive Industry Is Scored for "Spying" on Workers.

By Raymond Clapper.

With a typically bold stroke, Gen. Hugh S. Johnson took some wind out of his critics' sails by announcing a broad program of reforms and revisions when they gathered for the opening session of the NRA public forum in the Department of Commerce auditorium yesterday.

Undaunted, however, by Gen. Johnson's admission of NRA's shortcomings, the critics pitched in at that session and at five others scattered about the city. Dozens of persons who had traveled hundreds of miles through stormy weather aired complaints large and small all afternoon and far into the night.

Merchants, manufacturers, spokesmen for labor, housewives, Communists, Senator Gerald Nye, of North Dakota, and even Mrs. Roosevelt, with her plea for a better break for corner groceries and small bookshops, joined in the barrage of brickbats. Some were well padded. Others were thrown raw.

Standards Held Lower.

NRA, one critic said, had actually lowered living standards of labor. Automobile manufacturers were charged with maintaining spy systems and with firing men for joining unions, in violation of section 7a.

Price-fixing code provisions, others charged, were leading straight to monopoly. One merchant charged the retail code, drafted by retail groups under the impression they were participating in a movement for industrial self-government, was materially altered by NRA in face of an overwhelming sentiment.

Some critics condemned the whole NRA effort, but more generally they gave strong indorsement to the basic purpose and confined their complaints to specific features.

But before they had a chance to square off, Gen. Johnson in the opening session said that as soon as the hearings of code authorities were over next week, another NRA forward movement would begin with broad revision of codes.

Fire Destroys Ft. Humphreys Printing Plant

Mysterious Blaze Levels Reproduction Building; $150,000 Damage.

Fire which caused damage estimated at $150,000 early yesterday destroyed the reproduction plant at Fort Humphreys, Va. Only one wall of the building was left standing, and the printing and map-making equipment in the plant was wrecked. The Fort Humphreys Fire Department, however, prevented the blaze from spreading.

The origin of the fire was undetermined, but Pvt. Howard Haidley, E Company, who was on sentry duty, reported that as he was gazing at the building, it suddenly burst into flames, though there was no noise as of an explosion. The fire occurred shortly before 5 a. m.

The siren with which the alarm could be spread through the fort was in the repair shop, but the sentry aroused the post by firing his rifle.

The plant was in an old building constructed in war times, but all of the equipment was new and all the books used by the engineer school at the fort were printed there as well as books and other technical material for other posts.

A board of inquiry was appointed to investigate the blaze. It consists of Maj. Robert Williams, Capt. David Neuman and Lieut. Charles Curran.

The post is occupied by the Thirteenth Engineers. Col George R. Spalding is commanding officer.

Gaming Drive Nets 30 More

Commissioners Silent on Incentive to "Mop Up" D. C. Establishments.

As police battered their way into another alleged gambling establishment yesterday, it was learned that the sudden splurge of activity against such establishments is the result of orders by the District Commissioners to "clean up such places."

Neither Commissioners Melvin C. Hazen nor George E. Allen would indicate the source of the pressure which resulted in the drive, unprecedented in recent years. In fact, they declared the drive was routine enforcement of gambling laws.

However, the Commissioners have indicated they intend to wipe out commercial gambling, which has honeycombed the city with bookmaking establishments where such games as craps and blackjack are also usually conducted.

In yesterday's raid, the third

Al Capone's Brother, Freed, Turns Legal—But Spurns Rum

Longbranch, Wash., Feb. 27 (AP). Smiling, dapper Ralph Capone, of Chicago, came out of the McNeil Island Federal Penitentiary today, his sentence for income tax evasion served, and said he is going "into some legitimate business — not liquor."

"I never violated the law before prohibition, and I don't intend to now that prohibition is repealed," said the stocky, black-mustached elder brother of "Scarface Al" Capone when he was released after serving two years and five months and paying a fine of $10,000.

"The public always got me wrong. I was interested in horse racing and gambling. I never had much to do with Al's affairs. I'm going into some business—I don't know what—but I'm still interested in horses. They tried to sell me some horse-racing stock in Washington State enterprises, but nothing doing.

"Well, I made a slip and I paid for it," he said. "I am glad to be out and to go home, to bring my family a little happiness. After all, I didn't pay the tax and I did break the law.

"I also broke the prohibition law when it was in effect—so did 99 per cent of the other people. I did my time and I don't feel bitter toward anyone.

"Things have changed a lot since I came to McNeil, under President Roosevelt's Administration. There's a fine man. If the people string along with him, they'll come out all right."

"Now I want to live quietly. No, I don't want my picture taken—I have had too much publicity. This income tax—I wanted to pay it, but my lawyers said no. I signed an affidavit I shouldn't have. I don't like to break the law—though I do like for a man to feel free," he said, puffing on a cigar.

A ferryboat guard slipped up behind him.

"No smoking on this boat," said the guard.

"Oh, all right," said Capone, with a quick glance toward the prison.

Virginia Race Bills Killed

Senate Committee Votes Unanimously Against Horse Betting.

Richmond, Va., Feb. 27 (AP).—The bills to legalize horse racing and pari-mutuel betting in Virginia were "killed" today by the Senate finance committee by unanimous vote.

Companion bills, once voted down by the lack of one vote in the House of Delegates and later revived to pass with a substantial margin, failed to get a single recorded vote in the Senate committee, which later rejected a motion to reconsider.

The finance committee action doomed the bills to indefinite postponement, beyond resurrection save by discharging the committee on a motion from the floor. That was generally believed improbable, since the finance committee is the most powerful of the upper house, and its membership comprises more than a third of the whole membership.

The bills were "killed" after a public hearing of nearly two hours' duration, in which Senator Cecil Conor, of Loudoun, Delegate Hall, Delegate King Harman and a representative of the Virginia Horse Breeders Association spoke for the measures, and a large delegation of ministers and others led by the Rev. W. S. Deyerle, Methodist preacher, of Richmond, denounced them.

Tugwell Heads Farm Survey In Puerto Rico

Dern Cites 'Abject Poverty' Due to Unbalanced Economy.

Assistant Secretary of Agriculture Rexford G. Tugwell will head a committee of experts to make a survey of agricultural conditions in Puerto Rico, it was announced yesterday by Secretary of War George R. Dern.

Secretary Dern said he and Gov. Blanton Winship, of Puerto Rico, had discussed island conditions and agreed that "it would be highly advisable to have the situation studied by economists from the Department of Agriculture."

"I have reached the conclusion tha there is a very serious agricultural problem in Puerto Rico," Secretary Dern said. "I am informed that the island is supporting, not the number of people who can be properly fed, but the number of people who can be kept alive.

"Puerto Rico is almost exclusively an agricultural community, and yet it is in the position of importing most of its food. This means that practically the entire income is exchanged for foodstuffs, in consequence of which the mass of the population lives in abject poverty. If the Puerto Ricans could raise their own food and keep their money, it should be possible to raise the standard of living very materially.

Bureaucrat Grip on Industry Feared by Stock Market Bill

Spokesman Tells Inquiry Federal Trade Group Would Dominate.

By Felix Bruner.

If the Federal stock market control bill is enacted in its present form, all commerce and industry would come under the domination of the Federal Trade Commission. Roland Redmond, attorney for the New York Stock Exchange, told the Senate Banking Committee yesterday.

Redmond declared this would be brought about by the provisions of the bill giving the commission broad discretionary powers in determining the kind and amount of information to be required of concerns whose securities are listed.

It was indicated during the hearing and afterward that several modifications in the bill would be made by the committee. One of these will make more specific the information to be required of corporations with listed securities.

The entire committee session yesterday was taken up with the testimony of Thomas Corcoran, counsel for the Reconstruction Finance Corporation and one of the men who drafted the bill. The committee decided to put Corcoran on the stand ahead of Richard Whitney, president of the New York Exchange, who was ready to tesify.

Whitney to Follow Corcoran.

Corcoran did not complete his testimony and is expected to resume today. Whitney probably will follow him, facing Ferdinand Pecora, counsel for the committee, who has had charge of the prolonged Stock Exchange investigation.

The stock exchange control bill as it is drafted provides for a quarterly audited statement from each concern with listed securities and for monthly gross earning statements.

Senator Fletcher (Democrat), Florida, chairman of the committee, said he believed there was some ground for complaint about the report provision of the measure because the cost of making required reports might prove prohibitive. He pointed out also that the business of some concerns is seasonal and that monthly reports from these concerns would not be necessary.

Corcoran argued that the commission would require a uniform system of accounting and that when this system is worked out the cost of making the reports would not be prohibitive.

Corcoran Minimizes Cost.

"The cost would not be excessive as compared with the value of the reports to stockholders and their value in preventing secret pool operations," Corcoran said.

"These reports would eliminate secrecy and let the investor know what he is buying," he said.

Redmond argued that the bill permits the commission to obtain and make public an unlimited amount of information about corporations.

"The Interstate Commerce Commission controls the railroads and nobody has died as a result," Corcoran retorted to Redmond's statement that the measure would permit the Federal Trade Commission to control business.

"Except the railroads," Senator Kean (Republican), New Jersey, remarked.

"But the stock exchange has been insisting that corporations supply more information," Corcoran said. "Now we are trying to help it get the information."

Pecora Hurls Retort.

"God save us from our friends," Redmond replied. "They are pushing us beyond the limit of common sense."

Pecora expressed the opinion that "it is as fair to assume that the Federal Trade Commission would exercise as much common sense as the New York Stock Exchange."

Redmond contended the proposed bill restricted freedom of contract.

At the beginning of the session, the committee gave Redmond a privilege not usually granted to outsiders, that of examining witnesses before the committee.

Corcoran read the bill section by section and gave his explanation of each section. At the end of the day he was hardly halfway through the bulky measure.

At the beginning of the hearing Pecora asked that the stock exchange supply the committee with operating and financial statements covering the last three years. Redmond promised to produce such statements as exist.

Purposes of Bill Cited.

Corcoran said the measure had four major purposes: Control of credit that goes into the market, protection of investors from the evils of "market making," protection of investors against exploitation by insiders, and the regulation of the market in unlisted securities.

He said the measure had met objections by stock exchange officials "but you can't expect to regulate the most powerful institution in the United States and expect it to submit without objection."

"Many of the provisions of this bill, however, would not be necessary if we were dealing only with the New York Stock Exchange and if we knew that reforms in the exchange would continue," he said.

The first provision discussed was that of margins, the bill providing for a minimum margin of 60 per cent, except on stable securities, where the margin would be 40 per cent.

"Howls" Laid to Margin Cut.

"This measure would cut the margin business at least in half and brokers would lose commissions. That is why they are howling," Corcoran said.

Senator Bulkley (Democrat), Ohio, asked if it would not be advisable to prevent speculators from trading on margin. Corcoran said that some provision for borrowing is necessary to keep the market liquid.

"My contention is that if you are going part of the way you might as well go all of the way," Bulkley said.

Corcoran replied that the bill represented a compromise.

"Wouldn't high margin requirements result in bootlegging in the brokerage business?" Senator Gore (Democrat), Oklahoma, asked.

"You wil always have some bootlegging, but you can stop bootlegging just as the bucket shop has been put out of business," Corcoran replied. "The problem would be no more serious under this law than under existing lows."

Protects System, He Says.

"You'll never be able to stand between a fool and his folly," Gore said. He suggested that margin provisions be extended to apply to purchase of real estate on payments.

"This provision protects the American business system against fluctuations caused by the use of too much borrowed money," Corcoran said. "I believe it is more important to protect the business system than to protect the lamb in the market."

While the Senate committee was hearing Corcoran, the House committee considering the same measure was being told by Michael J. O'Brien, president of the Chicago Stock Exchange, that this is not the time to restrict liquidity unnecessarily and freeze assets. Charles A. Collins, president of the Boston Exchange, said the bill would work a hardship on the New England public and the security houses serving that region.

Collins testified that about 75 per cent of the Boston Exchange members acted both as brokers and dealers. He said provisions of the bill preventing this arrangement would force New England security houses to withdraw from small cities, making securities less readily marketable.

of the East, the Weather Bureau stated.

To Reach Climax Today.

This "high" will reach its climax this morning and bring the minimum temperature of 5 degrees. From the climax, the pressure will slowly drop and bring the much wished for rise in temperature.

The forecaster would not make any prophecy for March's weather, other than the mildness of its advent. But this mild beginning promises a stormy ending, according to the old adage.

Willis R. Gregg, whose start as chief of the Weather Bureau seemed to put a cold jinx on the Nation, hopes the cold will be forgotten with a normal spring.

Some 4,000 CWA workers yesterday attacked the 6½ inches of Sunday's snowfall yesterday and made a great impression. The snow was loaded into trucks and dumped down sewers.

These workers, who worked 6 hours at 45 cents an hour, will earn $10,800 in wages. This can be repeated today, but after that, any snow must be moved at the District's expense.

Although trolley service was returning to normal, there were several delays yesterday morning due to ice-coated conductors in the underground system.

Flights Are Resumed.

Aviation lines and Army air-mail fliers got into action with the return of fair weather. In most cases, all scheduled flights were resumed.

New York's snow problem yesterday had 53,000 men shoveling the 13.9 inches from the city streets, according to the Associated Press.

Yesterday, the Weather Bureau stated, a blizzard raged in the maritime provinces of Canada, blocking roads, breaking down communication lines and freezing harbors.

Extortion Plot Fails; 2 Slain

Gangster Pair Falls Before Police Fire; Liquor Dealer Menaced.

St. Louis, Feb. 27 (AP).—Death of two gangsters, identified as extortionists, in a gun battle with police, was followed today by orders calling for arrest of Herman Tipton, head of the Cuckoo Gang, and two associates.

Norman Godier, ex-convict, and James Vincent Griffin, also known by police, were killed in a burst of gunfire from weapons oaf eight detectives, who lost night hid in the apartment of Michael Accardi, liquor dealer.

Detectives James B. Mowbrak was wounded. The officers concealed themselves in the apartment after Accardi reported that a group of men called at his home last Saturday and demanded $2,500 under threat of kidnaping and death i he refused.

While the officers were present, Accardi was told several times over the telephone to take the money down town for delivery. He refused, saying he was afraid, and asked his caller to come to his home.

Mississippi Beer Ends 25-Year Wait

Legislators Rush to Mugs, Scorning Formalities.

Jackson, Miss., Feb. 27 (AP).—Mississippi today quenched a 25-year thirst with legal 3.2 beer and wine.

Some one in the House of Representatives moved that "the House do now adjourn and have a good, cold bottle of beer," and the members started filing out without voting. When the news spread, beer signs were swung outside by dealers and mugs came to the top of counters.

Mississippi, bone dry for many years, was the first State to ratify the prohibition amendment. It still has not ratified the twenty-first amendment, which repealed the eighteenth.

which we are going and the policy we are carrying out."

He pointed out, however, that a phase of the Hapsburg question could be solved without further delay—anti-Hapsburg laws must be revoked.

The victorious Heimwehr, he went on, does not want to be known as reactionary or opposed to the workers.

Reports that Archduke Otto was interesting himself in the Austrian situation were scoffed at by members of his household in Brussels.

A dispatch from Brussels said the claimant to the Austrian throne was working at the University of Louvain for a degree in political science and that he was remaining in his castle, notwithstanding reports he had set out for Vienna.

Nazis Defy Dollfuss, To Parade in Vienna

Vienna, Feb. 27 (U.P.).—Nazis throughout Austria plan to challenge the government ban against the party tomorrow and appear on the streets wearing the emblem of their organization.

The United Press was informed the demonstration will mark the expiration at noon tomorrow of the "ultimatum" given Dollfuss last week by Theo Habicht, German leader of the Austrian Nazis.

Habicht, in a radio address from Munich, warned Chancellor Dollfuss that unless he threw in Austria's lot with the Germans by February 28, Nazi activities would be resumed. Dollfuss rejected the "ultimatum."

The action may result in wholesale Nazi arrests, and an outbreak was feared unless Adolf Hitler cancels Habicht's orders. Word from Berlin indicated Hitler was displeased with his lieutenant's action.

Discharged CW A Men Threaten Riot

Accuse Florida Officer of "Personal Preferences."

Tallahassee, Fla., Feb. 27 (AP).—The civil works executive committee was told today that rioting among workers in Wakulla County appears likely unless immediate changes are made in the administrative personnel there.

"The ugly situation down there," said H. S. Sanders, CWA engineer, "may amount to a riot that will seriously damage the work unless something is done quickly."

"The men who have been laid off are holding meetings, and if we don't watch out we're going to have a riot," added J. M. Smith, project engineer.

They charged Water Page, county CWA director, had used his personal preferences as to who would be retained.

Another Army Mail Crash Boosts Toll

Washington-Cleveland Ship Falls; Pilot Unhurt.

A Washington air mail plane bound for Cleveland was wrecked in a forced landing near Rockwood, Pa., yesterday, bringing to more than a score the total number of crack-ups since the Army took over the mail ten days ago.

Lieut. W. I. Sanders, pilot, escaped without injury. The air mail control office here said Sanders' motor failed and that he brought his ship down in a field.

Sanders made his way to a telephone and reported to Pittsburgh. The mail was transferred to a train for that city and Sanders returned to his damaged ship. Army officials said the plane would be repaired and brought back to Washington.

Bank Directors, $1,250,000 Gone

Two Officers Also Missing in Buenos Aires.

Buenos Aires, Feb. 27 (AP).—Police today raided a bank and arrested all the clerks, but said they found the entire board of directors and two executives missing—along with more than $1,250,000.

In the strong boxes of the Banco Commercial Plaza were exactly 96 pesos (about $32) and a directors' note for approximately $16,670.

Officers called it the most extensive swindle in the two years Argentina has had currency exchange control. Police seized books of the bank, but believed officials had fled the country.

Brown Shielded in Congress, Air Probe Witness Asserts

"Conspiracy" Former Line Official Says of One Award.

cision of the Comptroller General and the matter of domestic air mail appropriations, have now reached a successful conclusion."

Woolly said he had attended the 1930 "spoils conferences," which he said were the sole purpose as far as he could see of "accommodating ourselves so that everybody could have everything."

Hanshue told him that Brown was urging the merger of T. A. T. and Western Air, said Woolly, adding that he understood the Postoffice Department would not award another contract to Westrn Air unless they agreed to the combination.

Woolly advised strenuously against it, but Hanshue capitulated, he said, after conferring with Republican leaders in California whom he quoted as "not wanting to embarrass the President."

"Hanshue told me that to fight Brown on this thing would cost a million dollars'" explained the witness. "But I said he could win it and it would be a lot better to lose the million anyway rather than lose control of his line to those Eastern people and get affiliated with airplane manufacturers and other subsidiaries."

"Ours was the only successful independent line in the West and for a year all the Eastern outfits had been after us to sell out or merge.

"It Was Conspiracy."

"I told Hanshue it was a bad mess and practically a conspiracy. But he said he was going through with it, and I told him the minute T. W. A. got that contract I was getting out. And I did."

Reverting to the threat of Brown that he would not award the contract without assurance that he would be free of Congressional attack, Woolly said he warned Hanshue and his associates that they would never be able to fight or make a legitimate complaint about their treatment at the hands of the Postoffice Department after they agreed to furnish such assurance.

"I guess Brown thought the contracts were sour and he wanted to muzzle Hanshue and the rest right away, or else he wanted to make sure that Hanshue wouldn't make a complaint later."

During the "spoils conferences," said Woolly, he grew worried over the talk among the operators of agreements not to bid on each other's routes. Following vigorous objection on his part, he said, William P. MacCracken, chairman of the conference, and now on $5,000 bail pending appeal from a 10-day jail sentence for contempt of the Senate, called him to his office.

"MacCracken said the Postmaster General wanted to get some provisions in the bids to prevent 'wildcatters' from getting into the picture. He said they had finally agreed on night-flying provisions as the best way to keep them out."

Explains Smoot's Position.

Explaining young Smoot's connection with Western Air, Woolly said that he was employed by a publicity corporation which Woolly organized to handle the press relations of Western Air. Black then introduced a telegram from Smoot to Woolly, which said in part:

"Still have hope the general will approve your high bid. If he renders decision giving you contract under low bid, accept first checks under protest and file claim for the difference. This seems like a foolish procedure but it is a precedent in the general's office and claims have always been paid. Feel nobody should bring pressure to bear on general this week. If nothing happens next week father and I will see McCarl again."

Brown Was Unpopular.

Brown concluded his appearance before the committee under the friendly questioning of Senator Austin (Republican), Vermont, who sought to bring out that after the failure of the 1930 conferences Brown was very unpopular with the operators.

"They were all disgruntled and disappointed because I didn't act on their suggestions," said the former Cabinet official.

"Can you reconcile this disagreement and dissatisfaction with a conspiracy?" asked Austin.

"No, I can't. I always thought there had to be perfect agreement before there could be a conspiracy," said Brown.

He left the committee room with profuse thanks to committee members for having been allowed to testify and said he would be happy to return at any later date they needed him.

"Thank you, Mr. Brown," said Black. "We shall want you again without doubt."

Crowley introduced figures of payment made on five air-mail routes, showing that if the contracts had been awarded to the lowest bidder, instead of the highest as was the case, the saving to the Government would have been more than $6,000,000.

Austin indicated that he felt Postmaster General Farley should have noticed such a large overpayment earlier in his administration instead of waiting nearly a year before he found the contracts should be cancelled.

National Parks Being Probed.

Later querying Crowley about the reasons for the cancellation, Austin drew out the fact that the Postoffice Department was still carrying on a thorough investigation of the National Parks Airways contracts.

"So you cancel and then investigate, instead of investigating and then canceling?" he asked.

Crowley, trying to reconcile the two accusations, said that the department had made an investigation lasting several months before deciding on the drastic step of cancellation, but that on the other hand the National Parks Airways had been participants in the spoils conferences and could have an odor of collusion and fraud.

Warming to his subject Crowley defended the cancellation move by saying:

"The conspirators themselves have done practically everything. They have left written evidence of their guilt and admitted it. The only thing they haven't done is go before a bar of justice and plead guilty of conspiracy. They have defrauded the Government of millions."

Woolly will be recalled today, probably followed by Hanshue.

Virginia Senate Rejects, 30-9, Child Labor Act

Roosevelt Name Invoked in Vain to Pass "New Deal" Measure.

By Doug Warrenfels.

Richmond, Feb. 27.—For the second successive session, the Virginia Senate today refused to ratify the Federal child labor amendment by 30 to 9.

Earlier the House passed a bill by Delegate William D. Medley, Clarendon, calling for establishment of a uniform front foot sewerage assessment in Arlington County. The measure now goes to the Senate.

The only senators favoring ratification of the child labor measure were: Apperson, Chase, Fuller, Gilliam, Hilliard, Montague, Staples, Weaver and Wicker.

Senator Hill Montague, Richmond, champion of ratification, contended the move was favored by President Roosevelt, Labor Secretary Perkins, the American Federation of Labor and the Democratic national committee.

The roads committee favorably reported a bill to require installation of safety glass throughout all automobiles in the State by January 1, 1935.

Await Message on Liquor.

Passed by both houses, the measure to reduce automobile license fees from 70 to 40 cents per 100 pounds was sent to Gov. Peery. He indicated he would sign the bill to execute a campaign pledge.

A bill to regulate beauty parlor operators was rejected by the House.

The House passed a measure by Delegate Vivian Page, Norfolk, intended to restrict the activities of lobbyists. All persons interested in legislation would be denied the privilege of visiting members in legislative chambers, and would be required to register.

Meanwhile, Assemblymen awaited a special message from the Governor asking minor changes in the liquor control bill.

Virginia House to Get Budget, Tax Bills Today

Richmond, Feb. 27 (AP).—After setting the $82,000,000 general appropriations bill and the administration's $875,000 tax bill, in the order named, as special and continuing orders for 11:20 a. m. tomorrow, the House of Delegates today worked on its calendar at a whirlwind pace, passing 47 bills in less than that number of minutes and coming back for an afternoon session.

The Governor, in a statement, attacked suggestions that a six months' school term might be sufficient in Virginia. The statement was issued after publication of dispatches from Cleveland quoting Dr. Charles E. Myers, director of the research division of the Department of Education, as saying the rate of learning by pupils diminishes rapidly after six months.

The House adopted a resolution to prohibit consideration of House bills other than local bills after March 6, and fearing that some bills might die on the calendar in view of debate on the appropriations and tax measures, the delegates sought to send as many as posible to the Senate today.

Ickes the Atlas of New Deal

He Does Not Only One Huge Task Well, But Three.

And Has Rare Faculty of Surrounding Self With A-1 Men.

The identity of the author of "The New Dealers" must remain undisclosed. Publication of the material in The Washington Post does not necessarily imply editorial indorsement of his views.

By the Unofficial Observer.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT had never met Harold L. Ickes before he began to make up his Cabinet, but Hiram Johnson had recommended the Chicago reformer for a minor post, chief of the Indian Bureau. Then Roosevelt asked Johnson to name somebody to help in preparing the war debt data a couple of weeks before the inauguration. This was a shrewd political move, as thereby the irreconcilable left-center who had supported Roosevelt would sit in by proxy on the war-debt conferences. Johnson again recommended Ickes.

Meanwhile Roosevelt had been trying to persuade one of the Progressive Republican Senators to take the Secretaryship of the Interior. He offered the post to Bronson Cutting, of New Mexico, and to Hi-Hiram Johnson. Both refused it. Then, shortly before inauguration, Roosevelt called Johnson on the telephone and asked him once again to take the job. Johnson again refused.

"Who, then?" asked Roosevelt.

"Ickes," answered Johnson.

So Ickes, who had arrived in the East expecting to confer about the war debts, had a brief talk with Roosevelt and walked out with his appointment to the Secretaryship of the Interior in his pocket. Roosevelt took a fancy to him at the start, and subsequent events showed that his judgment was correct. Ickes turned out to be one of the really strong men of the Administration.

He needed to be, as the reorganization of the Interior Department and the recasting of government policies was in itself a tremendous job. Big business and public utility viewpoints still dominated the department.

Old Conservationists Brought Into Office.

You can't fight such influences with general principles. You need men. Ickes got them. Arthur Powell Davis had been ousted as the department's chief engineer at the behest of the power interests because Davis had conceived the Boulder Dam project. Ickes promptly removed the name of "Hoover Dam" from that enterprise which former President Hoover had done his best to prevent and brought Davis back into the Interior Department, where he lived a few weeks to enjoy his belated vindication. Ickes made John Collier, the life-long defender of the American Indian against official rapacities, Commissioner of Indian Affairs. Ickes brought in a lot of the old conservationists, veterans of the old Pinchot-Ballinger controversy and of 20 years of uphill fighting, among them Harry Slattery and Louis R. Glavis.

Glavis was the man who made the first break in the Tory ranks a generation ago, when his revelations of the looting of Alaska caused the split between Theodore Roosevelt and William Howard Taft. Glavis was an investigator for the Interior Department and discovered that there was fraudulent alienation of Government coal-lands in Alaska. He reported his findings to Richard Ballinger, Commissioner of the Land Office, who promptly resigned his Government job and became attorney for the Guggenheim Syndicate. Then, by a strange coincidence, Ballinger became Taft's Secretary of the Interior and ordered Glavis to clear the titles for the Alaska syndicate. Glavis requested a ruling from the Attorney General and, when the ruling was delayed, reported the matter to President Taft. Taft refused to believe Glavis and discharged both him and Gifford Pinchot, who had supported Glavis, thus paving the way for the break with T. R. and the Bull Moose party of 1912.

After a lifetime spent in investigating sensational facts, the Ku Klux Klan, the oil scandals, the forged Mexican documents, and similar semipolitical journalistic activities, Ickes brought Glavis back at the age of 50 to serve as chief investigator in preventing graft in the Administration of the $3,300,000,000 Public Works appropriation. Shortly thereafter, Glavis produced charges that the Tennessee and Alabama Power Cos. had been illegally diverting electric power from the Muscle Shoals plant.

Ickes Takes Command of Biggest Jobs.

For before the New Deal had been many months in existence, Ickes was handling some of its biggest jobs. He got control of public works, taking it away from Gen. Johnson, who wanted to handle it on the side. Ickes was afraid of graft in the distribution of that $3,300,000,000 and told Roosevelt of his fears, so Roosevelt gave him, instead of Johnson, the job of passing out the money. Ickes' precautions against graft slowed things up but eventually the money was allotted, all of it, in fact, before the end of 1933.

There may be found some graft in the PWA, eventually, but it will be chicken-feed graft, nothing on the scale of the Indian robberies, the Alaskan mess or the oil scandals. Ickes has guarded against that as far as is humanly possible, and God help the Ickes surbordinate who is caught with the goods if graft is discovered.

To protect himself against the importunities of Jim Farley and the hungry Democrats, Ickes made a hold-over Republican, Ebert K. Burlew, his administrative assistant. That slowed things up by red tape. Then, on top of all his other work, Ickes was given charge of the oil industry by President Roosevelt, under the Petroleum Administrative Board.

Any one of these three big jobs would have crushed an ordinary man but Ickes bore up like an Atlas. He had too much to do, but would not admit it, and kept cheerful and alert. His chief fault is that he is too suspicious. He has fought graft so long that he sees it lurking in every corner. That is an admirable point of view in Government.

In Ickes' case, his policy bore rewards. He and Glavis discovered graft at many points. The Democrats complain that they can get no jobs from Ickes and the "young liberals" in his department complain that they are balked by "that red-taped Tory," Burley. The Progressive Republicans have no complaint. They have come into their own at last and are making the most of it.

Need of Ickes' Work Held Decentralization.

Ickes needs to decentralize the administration of his work. If he could subdivide it like a real estate agent, the Roosevelt program would be better off, but he does not lag far behind the advance guard and is a spur behind every liberal portion of the New Deal, plunging into slum-clearance, model-housing, subsistence farming, and promoting conservation on every front.

After a long life of battling on the outside, he is praying that such an experience is good training for the constructive task of running the Government. He has guts and if he has faults in administration, in addition to being too suspicious, it is a tendency to fuss over details. Outside of his office, he is one of the humorists of the Cabinet. When on his way to the cruiser Indianapolis for the July 3, 1933, floating Cabinet meeting, on the rough waters of Chesapeake Bay, he said, "I'll die for my President, but I won't get seasick for him" and, as it seemed as though the launch which carried him to the warship might capsize, asked gravely if Cabinet members were rescued in the order of their rank.

He ranked seventh. "They call me almost anything," he said to a reporter who asked how to pronounce his name, and when wandering in the interminable corridors of the Commerce Building one day, he suggested to his companion, Attorney General Cummings, that they should telegraph to Herbert Hoover and "ask him how to get out of his building."

He works long hours and at top speed. His only hobby is gardening and he does not seem to mind that his wife, who is in the Illinois Legislature, and his children prefer to stay in Winnetka, Ill. Ickes himself is stocky, round-shouldered and bespectacled, somewhat like his political backer, Hiram Johnson, in physique and appearance. Like Johnson, too, he has a pleasant manner and talks freely and interestingly. He takes his job with tremendous seriousness. He does not take himself seriously at all.

Three men, said to answer descriptions of the trio who participated in the holdup and murder of Angus Burch at his Colmar Manor, Md., delicatessan store, February 4, have been arrested in Raleigh, N. C., it was announced yesterday at Upper Marlboro.

Tom Garrison, chief deputy sheriff of Prince Georges County, will go to Raleigh today.

Raleigh police said the men were arrested on a "hit and run" charge. Their car, they said, contained several guns and a quantity of ammunition.

Burch was killed by one of three men alleged to have held up his delicatessan store. The same men are wanted by Washington police for robbery of a gasoline station here, and by Virginia police for the holdup of a gas station in Arlington County.

Mandamus Asked Against Trial Jurist

Man Claims Judge Failed to Obey Ruling.

Richmond, Feb. 27 (AP).—An application for a writ of mandamus to compel Judge E. P. Cox, of the Circuit Court of Petersburg, to carry out what the petitioner claims was the intent of the supreme court, was in the hands of the latter body today.

The application was filed by Hatcher S. Seward and cited a recent supreme court ruling in his suit against the American Hardware Co. and others.

Mr. Seward alleges that Judge Cox, in the final trial court decree, did not carry out the mandate of the appellate division in regard to the firm's board of directors.

Virginia's Oyster Bill Meets Rebuff

Maryland's Conservation Chief Hits Measure.

Baltimore, Feb. 26 (AP).—Swepson Earle, State Conservation Commissioner said today that Virginia's new legislation to open the Potomac river to hand-scraping of oysters had complicated the situation instead of alleviating it.

He returned yesterday from Richmond where he went to testify before the Virginia House Committee on the Chesapeake Bay and tributaries.

The measure as approved, Earle said, would permit hand-scraping by boats up to 40 feet in length, using scrapes weighing not more than 40 pounds, nor more than 36 inches in width.

Such provision doubtless will fail to be ratified by the Maryland General Assembly, Earle said, as it would discriminate against Eastern Shore oystermen. According to the Maryland-Virginia compact of 1785, the legislative bodies of both States must ratify measures affecting the commonly shared territory.

Wide Revision In NRA Codes Is Scheduled

Johnson Hears Critics Assail Many Provisions, Promises Action.

Eagle campaign and a new and much tighter drive for compliance.

"These meetings are the first move in a closing up of our ranks for a new forward movement by NRA. Chance or circumstance may stop it, but you are not going to stop it or even make it falter."

Revisions contemplated concern further checks against cuthroat competition especially in service industries such as cleannig and dyeing; provision against prices going up faster than purchasing power; increases in wage rates and shortening of hours; more effective provision against sales below cost of production; protection against monopoly control and oppression of small enterprises; elimination of conflicts between codes; stricter compliance; elimination of petty racketeering in financing of code authorities; adequate labor and consumer representation in an advisory capacity on code authorities; wide use of mechanism for settling labor disputes; uniformity of Governmental representation on code authorities.

Many Changes Technical.

Many of these revisions are highly technical. The broader ones are aimed at furthering the basic purposes of NRA—increasing of purchasing power and elimination of destructive competition and in addition the one now beginning to receive an increasing amount of attention, the protection of consumer interests.

Welcoming constructive criticism, Gen. Johnson said he objected to attempts, by furtive innuendo, to shake public confidence by outright lies or half-baked and ignorant assertions.

"I object," he continued, "to having my assistants characterized by epithet without an iota of justification in fact. It tends to make public service by competents impossible.

"I think we have a right to answer such statements to the American people, to substitute facts for nonsense and, where we know the circumstance of such destructive and sterile criticism, to state those circumstances, especially when we know that the motives of such sniping and sapping is to deceive the public for some particular purpose—political or otherwise—a purpose subversive of good.

"To hold differently would be to say that there is some handicap on a great National enterprise that leaves it helpless and naked to the assaults of its enemies. There is no such handicap. We shall continue in the future as in the past to welcome constructive criticism, to act on it promptly where we can, and to answer and resist destructive and unsupported attacks in every case."

Tells of Progress.

Reciting the progress of NRA in its early stages, Gen. Johnson explained the Blue Eagle was introduced to give the public a ready symbol by which it could support those who were cooperating and withhold support from those who were not.

"For a variety of reasons it has lagged somewhat of late but it will not lag long," Gen. Johnson said. "We are going out to restore public information about the Blue Eagle in any region where that may be necessary—call it what you will (and chiselers, big and little, call it plenty of names) the Blue Eagle must be made indispensable to popular support for every business enterprise in this country."

Gen. Johnson declared his early forecasts of what NRA would do had proven 92 per cent accurate, reiterating that NRA had been responsible for reemploying 2,750,000 persons with an increased pay roll of $3,000,000,000 a year. Even if the cost of living has gone up 5 per cent, he said, those unemployed who obtained jobs are better off than if nothing had been done for them.

Following Gen. Johnson, the meeting was turned over to Donald Richberg, NRA counsel, who declared the recovery program is one of economic revolution, not of political revolt.

"Some people," he said, "may prefer marching Black Shirts, Brown Shirts or Red Shirts, but we in NRA believe in marching toward the old goal—the greatest happiness for the greatest number of people. We may not be marching in step, but our hearts are beating in tune."

He said there is no occasion for State socialism or for a dictatorship in the recovery effort, for it is devoted to maintaining the purposes and traditions of American life under which the country has prospered for 150 years.

Private Enterprise Urged.

The first outside speaker brought a plea for greater encouragement of private enterprise, for encouragement to a revival of private investment by amendment of the securities act, and for general subordination of reform features of recovery efforts in favor of concentrating on immediate recovery.

Text of Gen. Johnson's Speech Opening NRA Field Day for Critics

Personal Aspersions Not Allowed, Constructive Criticism Is Welcome; Errors of Speed Sought, Administrator Says.

Here is the text of Gen. Hugh S. Johnson's address yesterday to critics of NRA:

The National Recovery act is an attempt to spread employment, increase wages, cut out unfair and destructive trade and industrial practice and make definite the rights of labor. It recognized that this could be done only by voluntary consent of action among employers. It was a new and unprecedented proposal. It created for us the job of trying to get more than 3,000,000 employers to do something that many of them believed was sacrificial of their own interests and to do it together and at about the same time.

It was freely predicted as an impossible task.

In taking this job I knew that it was bound to raise such conflict of opinion that the Administrator could not avoid assaults of great and powerful interests on many acts of Administration and on every personal ground that could be invented. At the very outset I predicted precisely what has happened—to the extent of saying that taking the job was exactly like a man mounting the guillotine on a bet that the ax would not work.

It did not require much brains to foresee that and, any way, it is a small matter. I mention it here because this is an open round-up for criticism and I think it necessary to draw a sharp line between the kind of criticism that is helpful and should be encouraged, welcomed and acted upon, and the kind that is wholly unwarranted, highly obstructive and against which I have contested with all the strength I have.

Declares Doors Always Open To Constructive Criticism.

When a man has asserted that any provision of a code or any act under it works a hardship, or an injustice, or produces a bad result, or operates against the economic principles of the President's program, or contrary to any statutory provision or any pronouncement of the President's policy, or that some official is unjust, incompetent, inefficient or unfair, or when the criticism is of method or organization and, in every one of these cases, where facts and not epithets are presented, and especially where a suggestion of improvement is made, the doors of NRA are wide open to such an assertion and we will go more than half way to meet it.

Indeed the assertion that we have ever done anything else is absurd, and that is a statement which I can prove to anybody's satisfaction. All that you need to do is to consider the organization and method of NRA from the very first day and the very first plan for its organization the effort was to put in all controlling positions through which the codes must strain, men of every possible shade of opinion—from those who were popularly considered extreme on the radical side to men who were thought to be conservative.

We created a board of industrialists to pass on the codes from that viewpoint and—lest it be thought that NRA itself was industrial minded—the Secretary of Commerce was asked to name them. But to get a completely opposite point of view, we created a board of labor leaders also to pass on the codes and similarly, lest it be thought that NRA should influence this selection, we asked the Secretary of Labor to appoint the board. On my personal staff, with access to everything that passes the control office, I selected an industrial assistant but I also selected a labor assistant—one of the outstanding leaders of the labor movement in this country.

Need for Channel of Consumer Complaint Recognized.

There was complaint that the consumer's interest might be overlooked in the shuffle. Now, while we think that every person and thing in this country—every factory, store, railroad, or other enterprise—is a consumer and therefore that the real consumer's representative is the President himself, we nevertheless recognized the necessity for a channel of complaint and criticism and therefore set up a consumer's board, the function of which is to pass on all codes from that point of view.

Even in our staff and service departments such as the legal and research and planning departments, we similarly sought to secure leaders of economic and political thought from both sides of the argument to keep every policy and action broad, flexible and constantly informed by every shade of opinion.

This idea has attended every act of NRA. At all hearings there sit representatives appointed by all three of these boards, of directly conflicting interest.

Not a code or order comes across my desk that is not accompanied by the reports of all these advisory interests. While some one must make an ultimate decision, no such decision is ever made without extraordinary effort to compose these conflicting points of view.

In addition to all this, there is not a single important action taken by NRA that is not the result of a public hearing. In those hearings every person—from Communist to Conservative—who asserts any interest in the subject matter is invited to get up and make any criticism, comment or suggestion that may occur to him and never has anyone been denied, curtailed or silenced. It all gets into the record and is considered when action is taken.

Cites Creation of Board Headed by Darrow.

Also, it has been our invariable practice whenever a responsible and effective proponent of any adverse point of view has presented specific criticism of method and personnel to give that person complete access to anything we do or have here; to invite that person to join this organization himself (or to nominate some one to join it) and show us how we can improve our performance. This has been done in many cases and will continue to be our practice. Our latest effort in this direction is the appointment of a distinguished board to examine and report to the President on all complaints of an oppressive effect of codes or administrator on small business. This board was nominated by Senator Nye and appointed by the President, and will be presided over by Clarence Darrow.

Finally at our first momentary breatching space, we have called this conference, open to the world, the sole purpose of which is to receive criticisms—open or confidential, direct or implied—and I assure you that there is nothing but truth and sincerity in this endeavor.

Now, if we could have done something more, from the very beginning, to invite and foster and encourage criticism—to play the game squarely and on the open—I don't know what it would have been. If we could have created a machine better designed to make criticism effective and to keep adversary points of view always before us, I would not know how to invent it. To me the continued assertion that we resent, or repel, or ignore criticism is an absurd and howling irony on an organization which has more to make vibrant criticism the breath of its life than any other on record.

But, in curious inconsistency, the strictures on NRA go on to say that there is constant controversy in this organization. By the very nature of the organization and method I have just described, controversy on conflicting views of adversary interest is of the very essence of NRA. It could have been done differently with great ease. We could have set up here a military oligarchy. (By the way, we have been accused of that). Instead of bringing in men commissioned to express adversary opinions, we could have fired anybody who did so. We elected the contrary course because NRA is an economic democracy, an arena for controversy, a place where an earnest attempt is made to reach realistic compromise of conflicting opinion for the general good, and not a place for the exploitation of academic theory at the expense of the common welfare.

Resents Attacks on Aids Who "Sacrificed" to Help.

But there is a sort of assault on NRA to which I have continuously objected. It is a very different thing from what I have described—unwarranted aspersions on the good faith of men assisting here who to my certain knowledge have come to us at great personal sacrifice and given their strength and ability and health and manhood—like crusaders in a holy cause, and to limits of devotion the like of which I never saw even in the war. With two exceptions, the maximum salary here is $6,000, and there is hardly any one here in a principal position who has not earned much more than that. Some of them can and do earn many times more in other employment. They are here to serve their country at a crisis inspired by just such faith as sends a soldier into the ranks in war.

I object to attempts, by furtive innuendo, to shake public confidence, by outright lies or half-baked and ignorant assertions respecting acts and policies—usually uttered with the air of some secret and special information. There is no inside information about NRA, because it does whatever it does under the full gaze of whoever desires to take the trouble to look. I do not repel these statements when they are true, but I do think they are vicious when—as in 90 per cent of cases—they are entirely inaccurate and misleading.

I object to having my assistants characterized by epithet without an iota of justification in fact. It tends to make public service by competents impossible.

I think we have a right to answer such statements to the American people, to substitute facts for nonsense and, where we know the circumstance of such destructive and sterile criticism, to state those circumstances, especially when we know that the motive of such sniping and sapping is to deceive the public for some particular purpose—political or otherwise—a purpose subversive of good. To hold differently would be to say that there is some handicap on a great National enterprise that leaves it helpless and naked to the assaults of its enemies. There is no such handicap. We shall continue in the future as in the past to welcome constructive criticism, to act on it promptly where we can, and to answer and resist destructive and unsupported attacks in every case.

Meeting Called to Round Up All Helpful Comment.

The purpose of this meeting is to make a round-up of every kind of helpful comment that has been produced as a result of six months of operation under the President's reemployment agreement and the codes. That should be time enough to give us some real results of experience. Do not suppose that we do not have a great deal of material wholly outside what will be gathered here. We receive from 1,000 to 3,000 letters a day. They are all digested and the comment in them classified, not only for the purpose of feeling daily the pulse of the recovery program, but for the identical purpose of this meeting—to get all critical comment promptly and to find out where there is an inequitable or unintended bearing of the codes. Also the administration maintains a daily digest of newspaper comment which covers practically every publication. These also are studied personally every day by myself and my assistants.

Before we open this hearing it may be appropriate to say what we already know from all these sources needs immediate attention.

1. A more uniform and equitable rule of National price stabilization in those cases where it is necessary to maintain wages at a decent standard against the certain results of predatory and cutthroat competition, and further insurance against increase of price faster and further than increase of purchasing power.

2. A more effective rule on costs for the purposes of maintaining rules against sales below costs of production.

3. Uniformity of wages and hourly rates in competitive industries.

4. Uniform classification of areas for the purpose of the North-South differentials.

5. Further reductions in hours per week and further increase in hourly wages.

6. Certainty of protection against monopoly control and oppression of small enterprise, and, especially, the inclusion in codes of adequate buying (as well as selling) provision to guard against oppression of small business.

7. A much-improved method for securing prompt and effective compliance.

8. A safe method of financing code administration without racketeering and abuse.

9. Elimination of inconsistent or conflicting provisions among various codes.

Adequate Labor Consumer Representation Necessary.

10. Adequate labor and consumer representation in an advisory capacity on code authorities.

11. Uniformity of governmental representation on code authorities.

12. Wider use of mechanism for settling labor disputes in connection with code administration.

There are many other matters which have already developed, but these are the 12 principal heads of improvement and these, together with whatever may develop as a result of this meeting, will be the principal heads of discussion in the code conference which opens March 5.

It is our purpose to determine, in the code conference, the opinion in codified industries as to how many of these improvements we can put into effect by general Presidential rulings, leaving to each industry the opportunity to show why the application of such rulings can not, or ought not to, be applied to it, or to what extent such rulings ought to be modified or stayed. It is our plan to move into this corrective process just as soon as the code conference is finished.

I go thus into some detail because I do not want anybody to assume the error that either of these two conferences is a gesture or a kind of "pep" meeting. They are both in deadly earnest and the purpose of them is to mop up the errors, shortcomings and mistakes of the rapid process of codification which, measured in figures of employment, has already covered about 90 per cent of American industry and which in a relatively short time will have covered it all.

For any man to understand NRA he must know something of the history of its several phases and the reason why its various actions were taken when and as they were.

As I have said, the law was passed on June 16. On July 9 the great cotton textile code was signed; on July 26 the wool textile and shipbuilding codes, on August 4 the electrical and coat and suit codes, on the 19th the petroleum, iron and steel and lumber codes. There were several other smaller codes, but until September 1 these were the only major industries to come under codes. The electrical, textile and iron and steel codes came so quickly because they had been worked on long before the act was passed and the petroleum industry had much experience in at least trying to get together. It was absolutely necessary to get such a group of major industries to come forward, both to show the way to others and to get some experience in the translations of the general principles of the statute into practicable working formulae.

But it takes weeks, and sometimes months, to make a major code, and no such rate of progress could have codified all of industry in time to do any good. The answer was the President's reemployment agreement and the Blue Eagle. The Blue Eagle was urgently necessary for six compelling reasons, any one of which, taken alone, justifies him, and the combination of all of which left us no other choice.

Had to Bring Industry Under Same Rule.

First—Industries are themselves competitive for labor in the open market. We could not apply one rule to one industry and another rule to its fellows. We had to bring all under the same rule immediately.

Second: In anticipation of new burdens under the agricultural and recovery acts, several industries had rushed into speculative overproduction. Stocks were piling up in mountains. We were keenly aware that, unless something were done instantly, we would be deluged by a new wave of unemployment with possible tragic results.

Third: We talk about interstate and intrastate commerce. As John Marshall once said: "In commerce we are one people," and that was never more forcibly demonstrated than upon passage of the recovery act. We are raising costs by increasing pay rolls. Intrastate commerce and industry competes with interstate commerce and industry. Unless we could find some rule to put them on the same basis of hours and wages, we would not have been justified in doing anything at all, because intrastate operations would simply have ruined interstate enterprise.

This was so clear and threatening that no man who lived here through those anxious days will ever again be persuaded that there is any important enterprise in this country that is not (in the language of the act) "in or affecting interstate commerce." We have had an astonishing lesson, which it is vitally important that the whole country should understand. State lines are not the significant lines in American commerce.

If there are any clear lines of demarcation they are regional rather than State boundaries. The areas are economic rather than political. The general low wage scales in the whole of the South and especially the starvation wages of Negroes in some industries had spread their effect like a great grease stain over large parts of the map of the United States—degrading the wages and living conditions of labor in other regions far removed.

Sweat Shop Garment Trade Cited as an Example.

On the strength of unconscionable wages the Birmingham district was invading the Detroit stove market, for example, leaving the Michigan stove industry no alternative except marked wage cuts.

Metropolitan sweat shops were doing a similar thing in the garment trade—intrastate though their operations may have been physically—both manufacture and sale—yet they were effectively closing the great metropolitan markets to any product not manufactured under similar degraded and disgraceful labor conditions. We have to devise a means of insuring some improvement by operators working physically intra-state, to protect interstate commerce from the most sinister and threatening aspect of the depression—predatory wage and price cutting to the imminent threatened destruction of American living standards. It is a constant process of levelling with no other direction than downward. It had to be arrested. Here again the answer was the President's agreement and the Blue Eagle.

Fourth: With a law affecting established practices of Nation-wide extent, except in glaring outstanding and important cases, you could no more enforce it by court process and criminal prosecution than you could enforce prohibition. It had to be enforced by public opinion.

In order for the public to support those who were cooperating to create employment and purchasing power and to withhold support from those who were not, there had to be a symbol easily resognizable, striking and effective. We designed the Blue Eagle for this purpose. It sounds simple but it was the first time in our history that the people as a whole were ever given a chance to enforce a statute enacted in their own interest by their own participation. It was as effective a demonstration as was ever given. For a variety of reasons it has lagged somewhat of late, but it will not lag long. We are going out to restore public information about the Blue Eagle in any region where that may be necessary—call it what you will (and chiselers big and little call it plenty of names) the Blue Eagle must be made indispensable to popular support for every business enterprise in this country.

Blue Eagle Served To Hasten Codification.

Five: There was an immediate necessity for starting the codification process throughout the whole of industry. The President's reemployment agreement provides for wages and hours on a little more drastic scale than was convenient for some industries. Relief for them lay in submission of codes and an accurate determination after a public hearing of what the exact rates should be. The plan worked. The Blue Eagle brought in the codes.

Sixth: As a result of Administration, it is much easier to lay down a general rule and then deal with the exceptions than to attempt to deal with each case separately. The President's agreement laid down the general rule. The codes permitted us to deal with the exceptions. We should have failed on any other plan.

Such were the reasons for the President's reemployment agreement and the Blue Eagle. That, too, has been criticized on the following grounds:

First: That too much was promised for it and that it failed to fulfill the promise—indeed that it accomplished nothing.

Second: That its effect to increase prices faster than consumers' income increased, and thus retarded recovery.

Third: That the methods used were those of ballyhoo and propaganda.

Now some of these charges raise questions of pure fact—and some raise questions of conjecture and opinion. Let us speak first of fact and of the often repeated statement that the Blue Eagle delivered less than was promised for him. I propose to prove to you from the record that this charge is pure invention—in other words that it is one of those deliberate misrepresentations designed and intended to hurt and hamper NRA and for no other purpose—in other words, a fraud on the public. Let us look at the record, because happily all of these things were made of record.

On June 6, 1933—ten days before the passage of the act, I held a press conference at which I said, according to the record: "We must put a lot of men back to work quickly at more than subsistence wages."

I was asked, "Can you do that with this bill?"

The answer was, "It is a gamble, but we believe we can."

As to Title II of the bill (Public Works) which was then being prepared for in NRA, I said, "One billion of expenditure will put one million men to work and it is hoped that by October Title II will be operating at the rate of $1,000,000,000—1,000,000 men."

As it turned out NRA was not charged with responsibility for Title II. A different plan and policy was adopted for which we have no responsibility. What I am responsible for is Title I, and in this the record shows I said: "Title I, however, is more important and it is estimated that three million men can be put to work under this title."

Census Showed Prediction 92 Per Cent Accurate.

That was the promise I made. Last fall, after the President's reemployment agreement was in full effect, we took a census with the cooperation of the Census Bureau, and had the results tabulated by them. This calculation on the most conservative basis showed a reemployment under codes and agreements at that time of 2,750,000 and an increased pay roll of $3,000,000,000 as a result of codes and agreements. My own belief is that the actual figure of reemployment was more than 3,000,000. The net of all that is to say that our stark estimate made on June 6 in an unknown field of the effect of Title II was on the least favorable basis about 92 per cent accurate so that, when any man says that extravagant promises were made for the Blue Eagle, and not fulfilled, he simply has no regard for the facts.

Since these facts are available to everybody I can only conclude this is a deliberate attempt to deprive the public of the benefits of NRA by misrepresentation.

The second similar statement is that NRA has increased prices faster than purchasing power and so has done more harm than good.

Before going into actual figures on this, here is a point of tremendous importance that these persons overlook. If yesterday approximately 3,000,000 people were out of work and tomorrow they are put on steady subsistence wages, and if in the meantime the cost of living has gone up 5 per cent, are those people better or worse off than if nothing at all had been done for them? If I have no money to buy a beefsteak dinner, does it make much difference to me whether it costs $1 or $1.05? I say—and I think these 3,000,000 reemployed will all agree—that I will take the $1 and buy liver and bacon with it. The claim of this criticism—even before we consider its truth—is cruel, cynical, buncombe.

Claim Simply Is Untrue, He Says, Citing Figures.

But, like the statement about extravagant promises, this comment is also simply untrue. As I have shown, with a few exceptions, the codes and reemployment agreements did not go into effect until September, 1933. The National Industrial Conference Board index on the cost of living for September was 77.9 per cent. At the end of December it was 77.3 per cent; at the end of January 77.5 per cent, and preliminary estimates for the end of February 77.8 per cent. In the meantime, the NRA increase in pay rolls was $3,000,000,000.

In other words, with the cost of living stationary, NRA reemployed 3,000,000 people (who were without jobs before) and added $3,000,000,000 to the annual wherewithal of workers to live. It must be remembered, too, that all this happened during a downward cycle of production when, without NRA, we would probably have had a fresh deluge of unemployment. That, as I have said before, was why we hurried.

Now these are the cold, hard facts of this NRA job, and of these underhanded, tricky and dishonest criticisms of NRA. I ask you—can you beat it? And, do you blame this Administration—extended to the limit of physical and nervous capacity to do something to relieve this hour of crisis and distress—do you blame the Administration of NRA for contesting and resenting it?

Let's come to the third criticism of the Blue Eagle and of these results—that they were achieved by propaganda and ballyhoo. Of course, that charge is tied up with the other two. Ballyhoo is false promise, false incitement, false salesmanship.

But, as I have shown, there was nothing false about the representations of NRA. We delivered what we promised and what we delivered was all to the good for American workers of all classes. What then is this talk of ballyhoo? I'll tell you what it is. It is that some of these enemies of higher wages and shorter hours object because we went over their heads straight to the people with the Blue Eagle, and showed workers how they could every one cooperate to get the benefits intended for them by this act.

Too Terrifyingly Simple To These Gentlemen.

It was—to these gentlemen—too terrifyingly simple. All that people had to do was to patronize Blue Eagle firms and ignore the rest. No employer could afford not to have the Blue Eagle and to have the Blue Eagle he had to play the game.

That is the reason for this campaign of misrepresentations of NRA. That's all there is to these personal assaults—all there is to what has recently disclosed itself as a concerted action by misrepresentation to break down NRA. It is the work of gentlemen who consider it a God-given right to sit at the first table of the great American dining room and who simply can not abide the idea that the mass of people of this country have any right to anything more than leftovers and whatever drops to the floor.

Our efforts to the contrary are—accordingly—"ballyhoo," and to their minds, the way to destroy them is to try to fool people into believing that they are a failure and of no use.

Well, gentlemen, it won't work. You can't get away with it. Ninety per cent of industry is under codes. All of it is under codes or agreements. The Blue Eagle has just begun to function. We are going on as we have begun. We are about to embark on a new Blue Eagle campaign and a new and much tighter drive for compliance. These meetings are the first move in a closing up of our ranks for a new forward movement by NRA. Chance or circumstance may stop it, but you are not going to stop it or even make it falter.

So much for the Blue Eagle and these attempts to clip his wings. Now let's get back to a few words more on the purpose of these two great conferences.

The reemployment agreement contained very few trade practices, and exceptions and stays were all handled by a single small board giving uniformity of result, but when the codes came in they covered a wide range of provisions. Each required special study and negotiation and a very large number of officials to deal with a vast variety. The need for action was great and urgent and, with so many hearings and determinations going on at once, it was unavoidable that a considerable degree of ununiformity should creep into the codes.

All of the proposals were experimental. We felt that the important thing was to get all industry codified and that a considerable variety of tentative provisions was very necessary for the purpose of experimentation and study. We could change them later as soon as we could prove what was good and what was bad—not by academic conjecture—but by experience.

Variety Caused Large Part of the Objections.

This variety served to raise most of the complaints and objections which have already listed. It is our hope that, out of the criticism and comment received here, and the wealth of material of a similar sort we have already accumulated, we may be able, on the eve of the new and more prosaic phase of code administration, into which we are now passing, to do much to make for a vast improvement in the whole great organized economic structure under NRA.

Therefore, we welcome you. We will try to give you every opportunity to present your case. We will record that presentation and give it earnest consideration in connection with the code conference. You will understand that there are rules necessary to orderly procedure that we must ask you to observe. You will also understand from what I have said why we will not receive personal aspersions. Neither will we receive attacks on the law itself, because that is not a matter within our control. It should be taken up with Congress. Nor will we entertain attacks on other departments of Government or the statement of general policy laid down by the President in setting up this organization. These too are matters not within our control.

We are here to hear of our own policies, methods, acts, errors, mistakes and blunders, and not those of anybody else over whose acts we have no control and for whose results we are not responsible.

Highlights in Johnson Speech

Striking lines from NRA Administrator Johnson's address to yesterday's conference of NRA critics:

The Blue Eagle has just begun to function. We are going on as we have begun.

We are about to embark on a new Blue Eagle campaign and a new and much tighter drive for compliance.

The doors of NRA are wide open to suggestion and criticism.

There is no inside information about NRA, because it does whatever it does under the full gaze of whoever desires to take the trouble to look.

I object to having my assistants characterized by epithet without an iota of justification in fact.

Further reductions in hours per week and further increase in hourly wages are needed.

The Blue Eagle provided the first opportunity the people ever had to enforce a statute enacted in their own interest by their own participation.

Those who are trying to break down NRA are gentlemen who consider it a God-given right to sit at the first table of the great American dining room and who simply can not abide the idea that the mass of people of this country have any right to anything more than leftovers.

"Blue Eagle Has Just Begun to Function;" New Drive Will Start Soon, With Greater Empasis on Compliance.

Strikes Grow In Wisconsin, Closing Plants

Main Nash Factory May Shut Doors; 2,000 Out at Alabama Mine.

Milwaukee, Wis., Feb. 27 (AP). Strikes grew in intensity in the industrial district of eastern Wisconsin today. In Milwaukee 1,200 of the 2,200 workers of the Seaman Body Corporation energetically tok up picketing duty. Several hundred prevented trains from entering yards of the plant.

A Nash plant in Racine has been closed for a week because of a strike and indivations were that the main Nash plant at Kenosha may cease operations because of shortage of parts. Workers in Kenosha were voting tonight on a proposal to walk out in a sympathy strike.

Tense Situation in Racine.

A tense situation prevailed about the Eisendrath Tannery at Racine. Pickets charged that trucks were driven recklessly through crowds of strikers to take food to a few workers in the plant. Two factories of the J. I. Case Co. and the plant of the Oster Clipper Co. were closed completely there by strikes.

A 5 per cent wage increase averted strikes in the Fred A. Mayer and the BB shoe factories here. Several other shoe strikes continued.

West Blocton, Ala., Feb. 27 (AP).—Coal-mining operations in the Cahaba River Valley tonight were greatly reduced with 2,000 miners in eight villages on strike, demanding the check-off system.

Picketing Shuts Shelby Mills.

Toledo, Ohio, Feb. 27 (AP).—Failure of negotiations for temporary settlement and additional strike meetings tightened the strike situation in auto parts plants today. Manufacturers offered a wage increase of 5 per cent and offered to settle all strike issues by April 1.

Shelby, N. C., Feb. 27 (AP).—The Cleveland cloth mills were closed at noon today as picketing strikers continued their activities against nonunion employes who had persisted in working since the strike began last Friday.

Unique Polish-German Pacts Bans Propaganda

Berlin, Feb. 27 (AP).—A ban on offensive propaganda between Poland and Germany is in effect today with the signing of a pact perhaps unique in international affairs.

Newspapers and radio broadcasting stations of Germany no longer may serve as media for attacks on Poland. And, by the same token, Germany may expect a like courtesy from Poland. Neither may the screen in either land portray motion pictures regarded as likely to give offense.

Moscow Hails Three Reich Fire "Heroes"

Cheering Crowd Welcomes Exiled Bulgarians to Their New Nation.

Moscow, Feb. 27 (AP).—Three erstwhile Bulgarian Communists acquitted of arson and treason charges in the German Reichstag fire trial arrived in their adopted country today amid enthusiastic cheering of several thousand Russians.

The men, Georgi Dimitroff, Wassil Taneff and Blagoi Popoff, were deported by airplane from Berlin, where they had been in jail for weeks despite Russian efforts to obtain their release.

"Hurrah for Dimitroff!" and "Hail the world revolution!" were among the slogans shouted at the trio, upon whom the Soviet Union conferred citizenship after Sofia withdrew their Bulgarian citizenship.

"Everything is well!" shouted Dimitroff in reply as he and his companions descended from the plane into arms of the crowd. A band played the internationale as Dimitroff was raised to the shoulders of Communist officials.

D. Z. Manuilsky, a member of the Communist internation executive committee, headed the boisterous throng, composed mostly of Communist party members, officials, and employers, but also large delegations of factory and office workers who crowded the airport waiting rooms and overflowed onto the closely-guarded landing field.

As lights of the plane appeared the crowd broke into wild cheers. Then the throng all but swamped the big eight-passenger ship as it taxied to the stopping place.

First to greet the "heroes" of the Leipzig trial was Joseph Unschlicht, chief of the Civil Air Service. Then came a group of Communist officials who emerged through the door of the plane with Dimitroff. He was grinning happily.

He and his comrades were driven to the Communist International Hotel on the Tverskaya—Moscow's Fifth avenue—in a large automobile, convoyed by cars carrying prominent leaders.

W. & M. Athletes Owe College $3,636, Virginia Auditor Says

Laws on Student Loans Not Observed, Peery Informed.

Richmond, Feb. 27 (AP).—State Auditor McCarthy Downs, in a report released today by Gov. Peery, stated that President J. A. C. Chandler, of the College of William and Mary, had disregarded the statutes relating to the institution's affairs.

Downs, in his formal audit, emphasized that "nothing that we shall say in this report should be construed as disparagement of the ability and integrity of the president."

He asserted, however, that certain practices had been "inconsistent with the statutes and good financial management."

Down referred to a section of the Code of Virginia which stipulates that loans from student aid funds shall be made "to needy and deserving students of talent and character from Virginia." The auditor said that loans to out-of-State students aggregating $1,261 had been found on the college's books.

A number of students who are prominent on the athletic teams of the college are named by Downs as in debt to the college. The amount due by them was said to have been accumulating since the session of 1931-32 and now has reached $3,636.

On this point, Downs said:

"Of the 1,400 students at the college, we find that 26, all of whom are athletes, or less than 2 per cent of the students, were due the college on open accounts at June 30, 1933, the sum of $3,636.39, or 21 2-3 per cent of $16,790.99—the total of students' accounts receivable at the main college at June 30, 1933.

The report shows an accumulated deficit in the "fund balances" for the year ended June 30, 1933, of $429,380.

School, Work Survey Is Set

Maryland to Determine Number of Children NRA Affected.

Baltimore, Feb. 27 (Spl.)—A statewide survey to determine the number of children under 16 years dropped from employment in Maryland due to NRA code provisions, and to learn how many between the ages of 14 and 16 are absent from school has been planned to be completed in April.

Miss Mary M. Wootton, in charge of research work of the State Department of Labor, said the survey would open as soon as transportation can be obtained for investigators.

Meanwhile children of needy families are being placed on the rolls of the Federal Emergency Relief Administration to get food, clothing and foot wear in 23 counties. The survey will be made as a Civil Works Administration project, according to Dr. J. Knox Insely, State Commissioner of Labor and Statistics.

Data important to all child welfare organizations will be collected.

In many counties it is said hundreds of children are in actual need of food and clothing and many are living in insanitary conditions.

West Virginia Asks Further Relief by U. S.

Legislature Pledges Full Cooperation in Effort to Pay Share.

Charleston, W. Va., Feb. 27 (Spl.). Pledging utilization of "every possible resource to aid the Federal Government," both houses of the Legislature today adopted a resolution asking the United States to continue grants of direct relief to West Virginia until the Legislature can find means to raise tax revenues for payment of the State's portion of aid cost.

The resolution, introduced by Speaker Ralph M. Hiner (Democrat), Pendleton, came in consequence of the recent ultimatum of the Federal relief administration that further relief allotments would be suspended until similar appropriations are made by the State.

Members voted down an amendment pledging the Legislature to raise $3,000,000 for State relief, the sum recently recommended by Gov. H. G. Kump. Speaker Hiner said $250,000 a month for ten months should suffice.

In spite of a Constitutional provision limiting salaries of members to $500 a year regardless of the length of a legislative session, the House today voted delegates $150 each for payment of their expenses while remaining in Charleston. The resolution was sent to the State auditor, Edgar B. Sims, who has before him a Senate resolution for a second mileage allowance for the present sessoin.

By a vote of 55 to 16, the House gave final approval to the bill placing barber and beauty shops under control of a State board. The State board is to be comprised of five members, including the State health commissioner, ex officio. Examinations of all barbers and beauticians, except those in the State for a year, is provided, with a requirement of an annual registration fee of $5 each.

Virginia Group Approves Milk Control Board

Absolute Power Is Given to Fix Prices in State Milksheds.

Richmond, Feb. 27 (AP).—The House committee on agriculture and mining last night reported out a bill which, if passed, will give the governor authority to appoint a milk control board of three members who will have what amounts to dictatorial powers over Virginia's dairy industry.

The committee vote was taken after more than 60 representatives of milk producers and distributors' organizations had expressed divergent opinions regarding the bill.

Producers in the Richmond area were, in general, opposed to the bill, while dairymen from northern points supported it. The measure is sponsored by Delegate J. Owen Beard, of Rockingham.

Power to Fix Prices.

The bill provides that the milk control board be created and given powers to fix prices for practically all persons engaged in the production and distribution of milk in Virginia.

Public hearings would have to be held in each "milkshed" and local boards created. Violations of the control board's dicta would result in penalties for offenders. The measure is being supported by the Virginia State Dairymen's Association and the Virginia Dairy Products Association.

Borrowers Must Buy Stock.

Strasburg, Va., Feb. 27 (Spl.). Farmers who borrow from the Strasburg Production Credit Corporation for the purpose of producing crops this season will be required to buy 5 per cent of the amount of the loan in stock of the corporation, Julian A. Everly, Middletown, secretary-treasurer, has announced.

The minimum loan will be $50 and the maximum amount loaned will be governed by the collateral offered by the farmer. Ordinarily, loans will run from 3 to 12 months. However, in the case of dairy farmers, the time may be extended to 18 months, it was stated. All loans will bear 6 per cent interest, to be repaid when the principal is due.

The Strasburg corporation, a subsidiary of the Federal Intermediate Credit Bank of Baltimore, makes loans to farmers in Clarke, Warren, Frederick, Page and Shenandoah counties.

Veto of Salary Cut Restoration Is Threatened

Senate Modification of Pay Return Throws Issue in Doubt.

the bill would restore to statutory levels the salaries of members of Congress and their secretaries and other help. Congressmen get more than $6,000 a year. Under the Borah amendment they would continue to receive the 15 per cent cut. That is not palatable to members of Congress, especially members of the House who have to bear the expense this year of a campaign for reelection.

Members of Congress, however, ar ein a difficult position. They could with grace vote to restore Government salaries, and they could point to their votes as indicative of their desire to boost everybody's wages. They will not have the same incentive to fight for full restoration if they don't get their slice. They are anxious, too, to keep themselves in a position where they can not be charged with being merely self-seeking. Leaders expressed doubt as to the outcome.

30 Fail to Flee New Gaming Raid

within a week, the special gambling squad under Lieut. George M. Little, smashed in at 915 Ninth street northwest and found a complete bookmaking place.

Police Method May Not Be Legal.

Thirty persons were captured despite efforts to escape through a neighboring Chinese laundry. Victor uliano, 24, of 2105 Fourth street northeast, was charged with setting up a gaming table. He was a Government witness in the shooting of Joseph F. Nalley in the Wunder Bar Club last November.

Further proof o fthe extraordinary character of the gambling drive was seen in the fact that police are using "observation" warrants—sworn statements by policemen before a police court judge that they observed certain numbers of men coming and going from certain places.

These warrants, which several lawyers have termed unlawful, charge no crime. It is believed that the raids are probably being made with the view of dismantling the paraphanalia of the places.

Try to "Embarrass" Customers.

However, if the practice is upheld by the courts it will probably be a serious blow to gambling enterprises here, attorneys said, because any place can be spotted then for a day or two by a police agent and then raided.

In the raid police continued the practice by which they hope to discourage patrons of raided places. This consists in taking all to the station house and requiring them to post $100 bond as witnesses.

Through this program, the authorities apparently hope to harass the gambling spirit by time lost in going to court, or in the possible embarrassment of being loaded in a patrol wagon, hearded to the police station and before the grand jury.

"It Rain Men" on Jo Hung.

No sooner had the raiders shattered the glass door at the Ninth street address yesterday and brought their axes into play on the barred doors within than occupants stampered to a back room and climbed a ladder to the roof.

Below they saw two roofs which graded into the back yard of the laundry of Jo Hung, at 813½ I street northwest. The fugitives leaped down upon the roofs and rushed through Hung's shop into the waiting arms of detectives.

Hung, who was busy with his work, hid when the men rushed through his place. Later, when they were being loaded into a patrol wagon, he said: "It rain men. Men coming from everywhere. Men I do not know—men who are not customers."

The raiders confiscated a three-section blackboard and other alleged gaming equipment. So fast did the occupants escape that only three were within when detectives entered.

A headquarters detective noticed knee and hand prints in the snow leading into a dog kennel in the rear of the raided premises. A fugitive who had sought to escape by crawling into the dog house was pulled out by the seat of the pants, and joined his colleagues in the patrol wagon.

Montgomery Pupils Show Work to Clubwomen

Post Staff Photos.

Third-grade pupils at Oakmont School, Washington Grove, Md., demonstrated to the Gaithersburg Women's Club some of the results of the new unit method of study now being used in Montgomery County schools at a meeting held at the home of Mrs. George A. Chadwick in Washington Grove Wednesday. The children presented an exhibit of American Indian subjects, all made by themselves, under supervision of Mrs. H. K. Pasma, their teacher. The exhibit included a wigwam, campfire scene and examples of pottery and beadwork as well as Indian costumes made by the children from burlap. A background of forest scenery completed the exhibit. The first and second grade children furnished music for the guests. The picture shows, left to right, Olive McIlwee, Robert Heller, David Crown and Eudonia Myers, as they recited "Hiawatha" amid their scenic efforts.

Senate Restores Full Pay And Veteran Compensation

bate, when Senator William E. Borah (Republican), Idaho, proposed that the 15 per cent pay cut be continued in the next fiscal year for all Federal workers, except the judiciary, receiving more than $6,000 annual base pay. It was adopted, 45 to 39.

Realizing after Monday's vote on the McCarran-Steiwer amendment to restore Spanish-American War veterans to 90 per cent of their March 19 pensions that they were headed for defeat, the Administration leaders virtually threw up their hands.

The only effort made to stop the march of the Democratic-Republican coalition was a speech by Democratic Leader Joseph T. Robinson to the effect that "this subject has been handled as a political matter and has been dealt with in a manner that, in my opinion, will result in the defeat of the legislation through an Executive veto."

Senator Robinson, in contending that "politics was being played," pointed out that at the inception of the session, Republicans held a party conference to form a united front to modify the economy act.

Republican Leader Charles L. McNary denied his party was inspired in its voting by partisan feelings. He pointed out that most of the Senate Republicans voted against the Hatfield proposal repealing the economy act outright.

Senator Pat McCarran (Democrat), Nevada, who, with Senator Frederick Steiwer (Republican), Oregon, has led the fight on behalf of the veterans, hotly assailed his party leader. He said it was not a matter of politics, but of "human hearts" that moved him.

He said he was not up for reelection this year and probably might never be. But as long as he was in the Senate, he would exercise his "God-given judgment," he asserted, adding he could not be led by threats of a Presidential veto.

29,000 Veterans Restored.

Meanwhile, the Senate adopted the McCarran-Steiwer amendment restoring about 29,000 World War service-connected presumptive cases to the compensation rolls and making the basic rate of compensation for total disability $100 monthly. It also adopted the McCarran-Steiwer amendment restoring to the compensation rolls presumptive service-connected cases under the emergency officers retirement act.

Senator Phillips Lee Goldsborough (Republican), Maryland, obtained Senate approval of an amendment restoring the former compensation rate of $150 a month for totally blinded World War veterans. Still another McCarran-Steiwer amendment granted free hospitalization to needy veterans to the limit of present facilities.

Senator Homer Bone (Democrat), Washington, proposed that pensions be doubled for widows and dependents of the men who perished in the aviation disasters of the Akron and the blimp J-3. It was suggested that the Shenandoah disaster should be included, and Senator Bone accepted the amendment.

By this time the Senate was in general disorder, with the leaders routed as they have not been since President Roosevelt entered the White House. Suggestions were made that double pensions be given the survivors of the Army fliers who have died carrying the air mail, but this was spurned by Senator Bone.

Although the Senate, on a viva voce vote, seemed overwhelming opposed to the Bone amendment, Vice President John N. Garner apparently took the view that none should be slighted. He ruled the amendment "agreed to." This brought laughter, but no protests, so his ruling stood.

Long Backs Bonus Bill.

There was a brief debate over the bonus proposal, sponsored by Senator Huey P. Long (Democrat), Louisiana. Senator Robinson warned it would mean "printing press currecy." Seator Henry F. Ashurst (Democrat), Arizona, said he was convinced payment of the bonus at this time would cause "a collapse of the National credit."

"If to be reelected I must bring about a collapse in he National credit, the price is too great," he asserted. "As valuable as my services may be, they are not worth risking a collapse in the National credit."

Senators McCarran, Shipstead and Cutting, avowed advocates of immediate payment of the bonus, urged rejection of the Long amendment on the ground that it should be dealt with i a separate bill. In effect, their argument was that the President should not be given that as an excuse for vetoing the bill.

Frankfort, Ky., Feb. 27 (AP).—The State's general fund was described as "absolutely bankrupt" in an audit of the State government released today to the Legislature and the general public. It was prepared at the instance of the Governor's advisory council.

The audit called the present conditions of the State's fiscal affairs "a real financial crisis" and submitted a list of proposed remedies which involve complete State and county reorganization.

Bride Resigns; Prettyman Gets Job as Counsel

Attack on Political Record Succeeds; New Post Proposed.

a target of periodic attacks, has already announced that he would resign this month, ostensibly because of ill health and age, and Herbert L. Davis has been replaced as superintendent of insurance.

Bride last night stated that he held no resentment against the Commissioners for his ouster, as he was confident that they were forced to act as they did, and he pledged his cooperation with Prettyman in the future administration of the corporation counsel's office.

The Commissioners, after accepting his resignation, praised Bride's record as their legal counsel and offered him the post of chairman of the District Board of Indeterminate Sentence and Parole, recently vacated by Isaac Gans, now on the Alcoholic Beverage Board. Bride said he would take the offer under consideration.

Patman Gratified.

On Capitol Hill, Patman expressed his gratification at Bride's resignation, and Senator Millard Tydings (Democrat) Maryland, who was sponsoring Prettyman, explained his part in the affair.

Senator Tydings, who had been reported as blocking the confirmation of Robert H. Jackson, of New York, as general counsel of the Bureau of Internal Revenue until Prettyman was provided for, denied that he was pushing Prettyman for corporation counsel.

"I only wanted to see him get a square deal," he said. "I want a statement as to the reasons for his resignation as counsel of the Internal Revenue Bureau before Jackson is confirmed."

Prettyman, who was called to the District Building shortly after the Commissioners visited the White House, is a Washington lawyer, who at one time bucked the Democratic machine in Montgomery County, headed by E. Brooke Lee, but later apparently joined the regulars.

Supported Roosevelt.

He campaigned for President Roosevelt and was rewarded with appointment to the post of general counsel of the Bureau of Internal Revenue last spring. When Secretary Morgenthau succeeded William H. Woodin as the Treasury head, however, he resigned, explaining that Morgenthau desired a man of his own selection.

Prettyman is the son of Dr. Forest Prettyman, chaplain of the Senate during the Wilson Administration, and is a former member of the law firm of Butler, Pope, Ballard & Loos, of Washington and Chicago. He was a member of counsel in the $34,000,000 Couzens tax case before the United States Board of Tax Appeals some years ago.

Prior to Bride's resignation yesterday, statements were issued by members of the House and the Senate indorsing him for reappointment. The indorsements came from Senator King, chairman of the Senate District Committee, Senator Capper (Republican), Kansas, and Representative Loring M. Black, jr., of the House District Committee.

Winter Dog Days.

Here it is right in the middle of the worst winter since 1888 and the dog days are already upon us. Old Shep, Winks, and just an ornery dawg, are the three canines who make this paradoxical observation possible. All of them made the front pages, Old Shep by catering to a sick fox, Winks by devouring in one gulp 12 White House breakfasts, and the unnamed pup by floating down the Delaware River on a cake of ice.

Something refreshing about this. Animal stories are usually reserved for hot weather. Editors seem to think they take readers' minds off the humidity. An old journalistic custom, that has irritated nobody but the New Yorker's Guy Fawkes, who hasn't been troubled much by such stories since the demise of the old World. We welcome them back into the news. The Good Samaritan Shepherd dog, the rascally Winks, and the nameless black mongrel who upset the equilibrium of Philadelphia's harbor police, ought to divide some kind of a Pulitzer prize. With canine precocity they knew how to waggle into the news just at the moment when there was altogether too much tragedy recorded in the press.

Foreign Trade Banks.

George N. Peek has accepted an offer to assume the presidency of three projected foreign trade banks, to finance trade with Russia, Cuba and "other countries." Information concerning the structure of these banks is extremely vague, but they are said to be designed "to provide a line of credit not now available through commercial banks."

In the case of Russia, and possibly Cuba, there are special reasons, economic and political, which may warrant the use of a government financing agency in making long-term advances that private banks would not be prepared to grant. In general, however, the expansion of our foreign trade is not hampered by lack of credit facilities for financing sales, but by the inability of foreigners to buy more goods from us unless they can sell to us in return.

Mr. Peek recognizes that fact when he says that the banks have not been created for the purpose "of acting as Santa Claus to hand out presents at home or abroad. Eventually exports and imports must balance." In other words, the export markets which Mr. Peek seeks to develop must be found through negotiations looking toward an exchange of goods. Otherwise government export and import banks, with the special exceptions noted, are more than likely either to have nothing to do or else to be called upon to finance exports destined for countries without the means to pay for them.

As foreign trade adviser to the President, Mr. Peek is presumably interested in plans for effecting reciprocal trade agreements which the President is reported to have under consideration. If the organization of the proposed banks is preliminary to a move to secure Congressional authorization to negotiate such agreements, the banks may have a field of activity opened to them in course of time. But profitable foreign trade can not be created merely by setting up machinery for financing it.

Nothing New.

Dr. Charles Sidney Smith, of George Washington University, makes what at first appears a perturbing comparison between the Rome of 133 B. C. and the United States of A. D. 1934. The Punic Wars had left a legacy of depression. Elected Tribune, Tiberius Sempronius Gracchus undertook to remember the Forgotten Man. He incorporated a Brain Trust of scholars, imposed its will on the Senate, formed an NRA—and, in the reaction of the Scipio Nasica riots, lost his life for his pains. His brother, Gaius, then devalued the currency, further attempted to fix prices and wages, tried to create employment through an ambitious program of road-building—and also failed.

The parallel is arresting. But it is well to remember that Rome went on. Nearly five centuries after the New Deal of the Gracchi, conditions were still comparable to those against which our New Deal is directed. As St. Basil the Great wrote of the Eastern Empire under Valens:

"I am filled with amazement at the invention of superfluities. The vehicles are countless . . . covered with brass and silver . . . horses whose pedigrees are kept like men's, and their descent from noble sires recorded . . . What will you answer to the Judge . . . you who harness horses with splendor and despise your brother if he is ill-dressed—who let your wheat rot, and will not feed the hungry—who hide your gold and despise the distressed?"

One may "view with alarm" or "point with pride" to the future of current social and economic experimentation. But the lessons of the past are not susceptible of simple application in either case. Historical analogies, though always thought-provoking, are chiefly valuable for corroboration of the generality contained in Ecclesiastes 1:9.

Angling For Votes.

On Monday the Senate voted to pay Spanish War veterans 90 per cent of the pensions that they were drawing last March and to restore to the rolls those Spanish War veterans who had failed to prove that their disabilities were service-connected. It is estimated that this proposal would add $60,000,000 to the pension roll. Another amendment to the independent offices appropriation bill approved yesterday would restore the pensions of disabled World War veterans, whose claims of presumptive service connection have been disallowed. This latter provision would increase the pension bill about $45,000,000.

When the first drastic executive orders relating to cuts in pensions were announced at the end of March, following the sweeping discretionary powers conferred upon the President by the Economy Act, it was estimated that budgetary savings on veteran outlays would amount to $460,000,000. Subsequently, modifications and compromises were forced by a storm of criticism from within and without Congress. Consequently estimates of amounts saved had to be revised downward speedily and the present session of Congress is witnessing a further paring and chiseling process. The Senate changes, if accepted, will cut the savings on veteran account to a mere $176,000,000.

The method and manner of the attack upon the Veteran economy measures are much more disturbing than the mounting costs of the changes contemplated. It is quite evident that Congress is not concerned primarily with the hardships inflicted upon disabled men suddenly deprived of pensions, but rather with the effect of its decisions upon the voters back home. If the Senate were seriously concerned about the questions of principle and policy at stake, it does not seem at all likely that the Republicans would have presented an unbroken front in favor of undermining the economy program.

The vote in the Senate, taken in connection with the movement in the House to pay cash bonuses by issuing greenbacks, reveals a lack of support in both branches of Congress and both parties for any constructive program of economy. The President realizing this situation, has announced that he will veto the bonus bill if it should be passed. His power to restrain the spending proclivities of a Congress facing a fall election is not what it was last March when he asked for new legislation "laying down broad principles for the granting of pensions and giving to the Executive the authority to prescribe administrative details." The voice of authority is still potent, however, and Congress, faced by threat of a veto, may well hesitate to ignore the warning.

The discouraging aspect of the controversy over the veterans is its pronouncedly calculated quality. Congressmen are weighing the political effect of a vote for or against administration measures instead of debating the merits of the proposals advanced.

The Corporation Counsel.

Appointment of E. Barrett Prettyman as Corporation Counsel to succeed William W. Bride will arouse no hostility on the score of the man chosen. It would be difficult to find anyone disposed to attack Mr. Prettyman on the score of legal competence or suitability for the position.

But in the obviously political campaign which has resulted in the supplanting of Mr. Bride there is much to cause concern to Washingtonians. Why, in filling this municipal post, should it have been necessary for the Commissioners to pay a visit to the White House? Why, as reported, was it thought desirable to consult Postmaster General Farley? Why did so much of the campaign against Mr. Bride center on his alleged contribution to the 1928 Republican campaign fund?

Such an intrusion of politics into the municipal affairs of Washington is highly unwelcome to local residents, as it must be to all citizens who have the welfare of the disfranchised District at heart. One reason why the people of Washington are denied a government of their own choosing, as well as representation in Congress, is the desire to keep the Capital City free from partisanship. Disfranchisement will become doubly irritating if important local posts are to be distributed as political spoils after the carpet-bagger fashion.

A Newspaper Personality.

Ernest Gruening has resigned from the editorial board of the Nation to become editor of the New York Evening Post. Last Sunday on this page we reprinted John Palmer Gavit's excellent essay on "The Personality of a Newspaper," in which he expressed the universal hope that the spirit of the old Evening Post might undergo reincarnation. Fulfillment of the ambition is now, in a measure, up to Dr. Gruening.

Trained as a physician at Harvard, Dr. Gruening has devoted his life to an even more exacting profession, that of journalism. He learned reporting in the grueling school of Hearst in Boston and experienced the heartbreaks of a newspaper executive on other journals in that city, which Oswald G. Villard once called "the poor farm of American journalism." His mind was too active for the Brahmin city. He went to New York; edited the old New York Tribune; became general manager for La Prensa, the only Latin-American daily in this country.

In 1927 Dr. Gruening moved to Portland, Me., and from his newspaper, the Evening News, hacked effectively at the tentacles of the Insull octopus, then greedily reaching 'way down East. While in Maine he wrote on his hobby, Mexico, producing one of the best American histories of that country in "Mexico and Its Heritage." The dragon slain and Insull fled to Greece, he returned to the Nation as chief of its editorial board. Last autumn the Administration sent him as technical adviser of the American delegation to the Pan-American Conference at Montevideo.

In all these capacities Dr. Gruening has been a crusader for a liberal public policy. "His militant and dynamic temper," says the Nation, "is exactly what is needed in the feeble ranks of daily journalism in New York." Perhaps the chief problem of the new editor will be to find the golden mean between feeble and febrile.

Employment Agencies.

Commissioner Allen's investigation of alleged racketeering by private employment offices is a laudable undertaking, assuming that care will be exercised to avoid encroachment upon the rights of legitimate agencies of this kind which are still serving a useful purpose. In dealing with any agency that makes a practice of swindling jobless men and women the most vigorous measures are justifiable. And there is reason to believe that this exploitation of misfortune is not unusual throughout the United States today.

The District maintains a Public Employment Center in cooperation with the Department of Labor. Many local employers as well as job seekers take advantage of its facilities. As the public becomes more familiar with this service the field for such private agencies as are unscrupulous in their operations will automatically be narrowed. On the other hand the specialized private agency, such as those catering to domestic service, will probably be benefited rather than harmed by the overdue regularization which is coming in the field of employment procedure.

In the great task of restoring the unemployed to jobs the National Reemployment Service, of which the Washington office is a part, has demonstrated its usefulness. It has registered 11,000,000 jobless persons and placed 3,750,000 of them. All workmen are listed according to their qualifications, and the service is maintained on a high plane of impartiality.

A program is now being worked out for the maintenance of permanent employment offices at strategic points throughout the country. Sixteen States, wherein 69 per cent of all American wage earners live, have already affiliated with this service. Others are arranging to do so. But the entire project is endangered by the curtailment of the $3,700,000 appropriation for this purpose recently ordered by the House. Unless the Senate restores this relatively small item and the House recedes from its absurd position, the unemployed will be left to the exploitation against which, locally, Commissioner Allen is prepared to fight.

"Bootstrap" Methods?

In the course of a very interesting article entitled "NRA Ideals: A Reply to Critics," Donald R. Richberg, general counsel for the NRA, maintains that further activities in the heavy industries should wait upon the development of greater mass purchasing power. What use, he asks, "to talk about 'reviving heavy industries' which could be supported only by surplus purchasing power, before any such purchasing power had been created?" Mr. Richberg refers pityingly to men with investments in heavy industries who "talk solemnly about the wisdom of releasing credits—so as to build in advance of a demand and thereby to help create a demand." He regards such attempts to pull ourselves out of the depression as "bootstrap" methods, which are almost certain to bring about a new decline when their inflationary effect has worn off.

Those disposed to take issue with Mr. Richberg will note two major weaknesses in his argument. In the first place, he assumes that there is no present bona fide demand for the products of the heavy industries. For example, he wants to know upon what sound basis orders could be given for new locomotives and freight cars, with idle equipment rusting upon storage tracks. The answer is that such orders are being placed, and more could be expected, if the private investment market were not in a state of virtual inanition. Similarly, Mr. Richberg errs in taking for granted that there is a superfluity of machines, houses, etc., that precludes the development of a market for new products of this type.

Apart from these objections, however, counsel for the NRA casts serious reflections upon the solidity of the economic theory underlying the NRA itself when he decries efforts to create demands for goods. From its inception the NRA has tried to build up consumer demands by raising wages and shortening hours, thus forcing price advances that ordinarily would have followed instead of preceding an expansion. It is such proceedings as these which assume the nature of "bootstrap" methods for coaxing industry to emerge from depression.

The Post welcomes letters from its readers. All communications should be signed with the writer's name. Upon publication initials or pen names will be used if requested. Letters should be limited to 300 words.

Opposes Birth Control.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Americans usually believe in fair play, so I request the opportuntiy of answering the three letters printed today, all of which do a commendable "ring-around-the-rosie" in getting away from the crux of the question.

Mr. Quinn takes me to task on the basis of the old bogey, "overpopulation." The word, naturally, belongs in the same category of "overproduction" by which I mean there "ain't no such animal." A more or less hasty survey of conditions in India, China and Japan will show Mr. Quinn that the trials and tribulations of those Oriental countries spring from many sources which can not be ascribed to the fact that they are not enlightened enough to practice birth control.

My argument was based on moral and philosophic grounds which deny the rights of humans to abuse God-given faculties which find their highest expression in the holy sacrament of matrimony. Nor should Mr. Wilson overlook the fact that morals enter into much legislation in any country and close inspection of divorce figures will give him an idea as to what role birth control and childlessness plays in divorce cases. Again, Mr. Wilson would find it hard to prove his theory of charity vs. the survival of the fittest in commenting on natural law. It is far more natural for the fit to take care of the weak than it is for men and women to attempt to trick nature (God?) by chemical and mechanical devices.

I have no children to raise but I hope to have some day. As to big families, perhaps I am rather well qualified to speak on their advantages and drawbacks. My parents had 10 children and, though we lost our father when the eldest was 17, we all managed to get high school educations and a chance at college work for a few others. I have been a butcher boy, truckman, office clerk and shipping clerk in past years and worked hard for college expenses. My family helped to the limit, just as I helped other members of that family when I was in a position to do so.

Fallacious reasoning is very simple. Facts are difficult to swallow when they go contrary to what we wish was right. I would aid my three critics to some clear thinking on birth control in the following manner: Recommend that they go to the Library of Congress and read Dr. R. de Guchteneere's "Judgement on Birth Control" or I will send them, at my own expense, the Rev. Dr. John M. Cooper's pamphlet entitled "Birth Control." There must be a "right" and a "wrong" side to every question and in this present discussion, that "rightness" or "wrongness" must be eternal. If a close examination of the evidence proves that my contentions are wrong, I shall admit it; and I should expect the same attitude on the part of those who differ with me. We can not both be right—and there the matter rests.

PAUL V. MURRAY.
Washington, Feb. 8.

Favors Birth Control.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: I appreciate your printing a broadside of three letters in reply to Mr. Murray's ravings against birth control. The answers of the three were adequate, and nothing more need be said on the special points covered.

I attended the three-day meeting of the American conference on birth control and National recovery at the Mayflower Hotel January 15-17. Following that, I was present at the two-day hearing of the House Judiciary Committee on H. R. 5978, introduced by Representative W. M. Pierce, of Oregon.

The appearance and the evident intelligence and character of the men and women who took part in the conference and the hearing were such as to inspire confidence. They are not old people, merely traditional in their ideas, nor are they simply reactionary echoes of outworn thinking and discredited authority. For the most part they are in the prime of life, doing valuable work, fathers and mothers of children who are concerned for the welfare of their fellow-men.

Mrs. Margaret Sanger is a woman of fine personality. She is a devoted mother, a trained nurse of large experience with the poor, and for 20 years the honored leader of what has become a world-wide movement for better families and a better human society. This, she rightly believes, is to be brought about largely through the intelligent, moral, sanitary and scientific control of the number of children born and the proper spacing of the times of their arrival in the home.

There is no subject that can be rightly shut off from scientific investigation. Some day we shall marvel that anyone ever opposed the use of the scientific method for developing a stronger, a more intelligent, a more Christian—and so, a happier—human society. Look at China, India, Japan, and the soft coal fields of our country! Isn't it high time to apply human intelligence to the problems connected with human reproduction?

LUTHER K. LONG.
Washington, Feb. 8.

Present Day "Slavery."

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Since 1865 we have immortalized Abraham Lincoln for the freeing of the black people from slavery. Let us hope that from 1933 on, we may immortalize Franklin D. Roosevelt for the freeing of white people from slavery.

He is working toward this goal by abolishing "child labor" and establishing a Nation-wide minimum wage scale. By giving a "living wage" to men, it will do away with the necessity of married women having to take jobs away from single women with dependents. Years ago when women married they quit their jobs, thus giving openings to young women just coming out of schools and colleges into the business world. Nowadays women marry and keep their jobs, thus causing the new crop of young business women to have to wait until some one dies and thus vacate their job.

America has always boasted about its wonderful educational facilities. By abolishing "child labor" it will permit these children, who formerly had to help support their families, a chance to gain all the knowledge that is rightfully theirs.

I believe that while the NRA is establishing a "minimum wage" for employes, steps should be taken to establish some sort of "maximum wage" limit. If some of these exorbitant wages now being paid to high executives could be reduced and the difference divided over the meager wages given to the willing and conscientious employes the industries would not suffer any financial losses by this plan. And much progress would be made by the United States toward recovery.

MISS PATRICIA CHASE.

Air-Mail Contracts.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: I think that Congressman Fish is all wrong in his statement in regard to the President canceling the mail contracts. When a Government contract becomes involved in any way, it is the duty of our President to take action if he sees fit. And if any person is found guilty of defrauding the Government he should be given the limit of the law.

Toll of the "Devil Wagon"

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Every intelligent, humane person raises his voice against war. But the voices that are raised against the automobile menace are few and far between. Yet the "devil wagon" has killed and injured more people than were killed and injured in the World War.

If the automobile can not be abolished, its murderous career can be checked by various means. I suggest that manufacturers be compelled by law to make automobiles incapable of going faster than 25 or 30 miles an hour; except that by policemen, firemen and other who require speedier cars may be licensed to buy and possess such cars.

The country is going so fast that it is getting nowhere, except to the dogs. "The more haste, the less speed!" CHARLES HOOPER.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: It gives me much satisfaction in seeing Robert Quillen's article again in your paper. While your paper has greatly improved under the new management, I would feel at a loss without Quillen.

As Others See It

Freedom's Judge.

There is a feeling that what Gen. Johnson wants to do with the big public meeting planned for March 5 is to regain for the NRA something like the public sentiment so strongly behind it some six or seven months ago. * * *

Since then the prestige and popularity of both the experiment and the General have greatly shrunk. He himself could hardly deny so patent a fact. Partly, this was inevitable. No publicly promoted enthusiasm could be indefinitely sustained. No such elaborate scheme could be put into operation without complications, confusions, mistakes and friction. To avoid these was beyond the power of any man, and it is stupid to blame Mr. Johnson because everything has not run smoothly and everybody is not happy. To some extent, however, he has contributed to the diminished public esteem himself.

Chiefly has he done this by the violence of his language. At first these fiery denunciations of everyone who disagreed with NRA operations or did not religiously conform and the novelty of his name-calling was news and he was depicted as a red-blooded, hard-hitting "he-man." Constant repetition and the uncontrolled nature of his temper changed this view. First it aroused resentment, then amusement.

People are now a little bored with his outbursts. In announcing his March 5 meeting he invited criticism and then, with an intemperance unusual even for him, proceeded to denounce his latest critic. He insinuated that he was a rat and a coward, charged he was being financed by Wall street, bitterly assailed both the publisher and the paper in which the criticism appeared. This did not do either the paper or the critic any harm—and certainly did Gen. Johnson no good. Few could find in the criticism anything to justify such a stupendous tirade.

Coupled with his invitation for everybody to come here and criticize, it made people laugh, and resulted in a number of cartoons picturing the General armed with dead cats, brickbats and other missiles, facing a lot of scared little people hiding behind trees. It seemed to mean he did not propose to have the criticism free, that he intends to lay down rules and regulations for his critics, and that if they criticize in a way he does not like he will throw them out. It makes something of a joke of the March 5 meeting.

(Frank Kent in Baltimore Sun.)

Along the Potomac

With

Carlisle Bargeron

THERE will undoubtedly be varying reactions to NRA'S first wallowing in the gold-fish bowl yesterday.

BARGERON.

Some people will conclude that labor is being brutally treated in places, others that labor is taking undue advantage of dear old industry.

To me the most striking note sounded in that parade of America, business men seeking amends on the one hand and labor representatives airing grievances on the other, was that of Mr. Ernest J. Spitzer, president of the Office Equipment Manufacturers' Institute. I suppose this is the code authority for the office-equipment people of the country.

Whether Mr. Spitzer ever got actually to be heard in yesterday's first episode, I don't know, but his publicity representative passed out a statement of what he would have said and what he will say when he is finally heard if it was not yesterday. In the way we do things in the Nation's Capital the mere passing out of the statement was tantamount to striking a note.

* * * *

Well, his was heartening. It stood out in sharp relief to the lugubrious cord which the other complainants played. To me it was a definite denial of the oft-heard statement that individual initiative in this country has gone forever. In the midst of regimentation and unified effort, the blending of trends and fusion of social purposes, Mr. Spitzer is a shining example of sturdy, rugged individualism.

What Mr. Spitzer wanted the NRA to do was to have the Government buy new office equipment.

Now for a man to take advantage of such a meeting as that being held by the NRA to try to sell office furniture is an example of initiative that no amount of regimentation can suppress.

* * * *

It's solely in the interest of recovery, too, that Mr. Spitzer wants to sell this furniture. The first paragraph of the statement given out by his publicity representative and passed around to all of the newspapermen covering the gold-fish bowl proceeding, read:

"A proposal to bring about increased governmental efficiency and at the same time contribute to permanent business recovery was presented" to the NRA &c. The statement continues:

"Taking as his theme the view that permanent recovery can only be obtained through the gainful employment of men and women in industry or agriculture," Mr. Spitzer said, &c.

With irrefutable reasoning what Mr. Spitzer said was that even if every unemployed person is placed on the Government pay roll we will not have taken a single step toward recovery, "because their pay must come out of taxes and these are dependent upon earnings."

You get the very definite impression here that although Mr. Spitzer is selling office furniture he is an irrepressible economist.

Well, it seems that his grievance is that the Government departments are reluctant to install his new office equipment for fear it will replace workers. To disprove this, and as his contribution to recovery, he suggests a commission to make a study without any cost to the Government at all. I believe, though I am not sure, that it is his contention that perhaps more workers, not less, would be needed. At any rate, as the statement explains, the matter could go through the "refining fire of discussion." He has the NRA there, even the Administration. If there is one thing neither can afford to turn down, in view of their much-advertised liberal attitude, it is a "refining fire of discussion."

I should like to be present when he gets up in the meeting and advances his plan, though. I should like to hear Crack-Down Johnson's reaction. When I left the hearing yesterday he was showing masterful patience. If he doesn't blow up on the office furniture proposition, let's put him to a real test.

Let's send an insurance salesman to see him.

"The Irrepressible Issue."

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Your stand on "The Irrepressible Issue" against the creation of an extraordinary budget financed by "greenbacks" is to be highly commended as a protection against the dangers of inflation. Permit me, however, to urge that it is the extraordinary budget that creates the danger rather than the greenbacks. The latter are an inevitable result of the former. If, indeed, we can ill-afford to issue "greenbacks" to bonus seekers or to use them in paying emergency expenditures of vast proportions, how much less can we afford to pay interest to a banking concession to issue a lot of such flat money for us?

In the final analysis, the new money "borrowed" by the Government must be free to some one somewhere in the chain. If some one collects interest on it, that interest must be repaid in taxes either by the same people or by some one else. Just why a favored group of bankers should be handed this interest while the rest of us pay it is beyond comprehension; and if those who collect the interest have to repay it in taxes, then why not make it free money in the first place, use it in normal budgetary expenses and, by cutting taxation, throw new money legitimately into the profit side of private industry, thus rebuilding private capital values and restoring the use of private assets in credit operations?

No End of Books

By Theodore Hall.

The Kingdom of Powys, J. C.

It would be far from fruitless if some one would look into the temperaments and habitudes of a certain Dorset couple in the middle of the last century, a vicar named Powys and his wife. For from them sprang perhaps the most remarkable family in England—no less than 12 sons and daughters, most of them writers, the rest of them workers in arts, all possessed of an innate distinction of vitality, insight, and faith. Together they form an empire. Today we look at the eldest, John Cowper Powys, author of "Wolf Solvent," "A Glastonbury Romance," and the great novel just published—"Weymouth Sands" (Simon & Schuster, $3).

* * * *

Very few writers in our time made so vigorous a credo as has Mr. Powys of what we are likely to think an old-fashioned phrase—"My mind to me a kingdom is." In a day of gentlemen who "hold the mirror up to life" and stumble around pretty sadly while doing it, in a day of tedious Bourbon, Marxist, humanist and naturalistic interpreters, the kingdom of Powys is something intensely individual, strange and wonderful. It remains quite his own.

In his personal life, so strong is this credo that he conquers endless physical pain, discounts all distraction. From a pantheist belief deep in his Welsh and Celtic blood, he feels everywhere on his New York State farm the presence of spirits in the stones and trees. Even his close friend Theodore Dreiser, who has perhaps as diametrically opposite a nature as one could find, can not but respect this sensitivity. Moreover, this trait is not confined toward the inanimate—it extends to a profound sympathy, a natural geniality with people.

One day in New York City, Powys was sitting on the lowest step of a house, his feet on the sidewalk. He sat as if in dejection, his head forward and hat in his hands. An old lady happened to pass. Then she retraced her steps and dropped half a dollar into his hat. I believe the character of Powys is summed up in what he did then—he raised his head, smiled, and said: "God bless you, madam!"

* * * *

All this marks "Weymouth Sands." It is a huge novel, 579 large pages (most handsomely printed and bound, by the way), filled to the brim with characters, plots and counterplots. The scene is the sea-coast town of Weymouth; the characters are taken from all classes of society, and range in nature from Sylmanus Cobbold, a half-mad, preaching mystic, to his brother Jerry, cynical and successful clown of the music-halls. There are gypsies and sailors, mild little tutors and grasping quarry-owners, stage dancers and local politicians.

Now I have perhaps made a mistake in thus generalizing, for about these types you will have begun to cluster preconceptions—and you will be quite wrong. For the distinguishing token of the book is the Powys "inner kingdom," and for us that means a distinct other-worldliness. These tutors and dancers are not the flat, hard little figures you might, from other fiction, expect. You may have visited Weymouth, you may have post cards of Hardy's monument in your desk—it is not that Weymouth or monument you will find here. For the town and the characters, the very feel of the air and look of the sea, the turn of mind and action of each character, take root and grow from Powys' own individuality. To be sure, this is a process common to artists. And yet, in the present case, it is peculiarly conspicuous. We do not so much recognize the characters as we are led powerfully to believe in them and their life.

Not only is the book Powys' own world in locus—it is strangely timeless. At the foot of the "dramatis personae" he specifies "Time: the present." Yet you will forget that at once. You will read on and on, and if some one asked the question point blank you could not say whether the story took place in the eighteenth or the nineteenth or the twentieth century. Then you will come upon an automobile, and you will be as startled as I was.

* * * *

For Powys has written, not out of the dreariness of a mechanically and economically conditioned attitude, but out of the endlessly fresh and varied changes of the human heart. Here at least is one place where that latter phase drops all its hackneyed quality. Here the hates and loves of the heart, their interactions and their relations with nature, are whole and sufficient subject. A tyro lugs in "the present" on all fours; a master knows of "a present" which lasts forever.

And so we see these characters more vividly and forcefully than any light-of-day narrative could accomplish. To a Weymouth tourist, Jobber Skald would be only a hulking, rather dirty and awkward passer-by in the street. To us he is a titan, wrestling with his love for the little governess and with his deathly hate for Cadistock, the quarry owner. The pale-faced tutor is a figure of universal frustration, the mad gypsy boy a token of the wild beauty in the world. Yet I do not intend any implication of allegory; it is only that great writing always clears our eyes to far more than the particular subject in hand.

"Weymouth Sands," with its half-mystic interconnections of mind and matter, its persuasive pantheism of sea and tower and moor, stands as a world and a kingdom by itself. You may for a while think it rather weird, perhaps eerie, yet you will remain to be captivated in this strange land. For Powys has written a solidly great and enduring novel of the first rank.

Ship Engineer Found Dead.

HATTIE W. CARAWAY, Senator from Arkansas. First woman elected to the Senate. Appointed to succeed her husband upon his death in 1931, then elected on January 12, 1932, for the remainder of his unexpired term and reelected the following November. Black-garbed, reticent, she has the distinction of having made no speeches in the Senate. She broke her silence—save for voting purposes—only once. That was to insert in the Record a sad poem entitled, "Farm Woman to the Earth." Because of Huey Long, who crusaded for her with his traveling political carnival in 1932, she was in the spotlight during her primary campaign. And when the White House dog, Major, bit her (not seriously) last April she had another day in print. Otherwise she has been rarely in the public eye, unlike her late, famous rapier-tongued husband. She contends that the men in the Senate do all the talking necessary—plus.

Best Mechanic Is One Who Has Most Tools

By Robert Quillen

An article in the February Atlantic makes the point that success is largely a matter of vocabulary. If a man knows a few big words, he will be a foreman; if he knows scores of jaw-breakers, he will be the head of the firm.

This method of measuring men has been tested and proved by the Human Engineering Laboratories. This organization prepared a list of 150 words, including such strangers as "glabrous," and invited men in all walks of life to select a synonym for each word.

High school freshmen averaged 76 errors, college freshmen 42, college graduates 27, college professors 8 and "major" business executives 7.

This seems to prove something, but it doesn't prove that a vocabulary of unusual words can make anybody successful. If that were true, a few months' study of the dictionary would bring larger returns than four years of college training.

An experiment, like an X-ray picture, is without value unless somebody knows how to interpret it. It is easy to "prove" that tobacco makes men stupid if you select stupid men for the experiment.

Statistics show that college-trained men are more successful than others, but overlook the fact that boys destined to be successful are the ones who go to college.

So this experiment, demonstrating that successful men have good vocabularies, reveals a fact but gives the wrong explanation.

Men succeed because they are intelligent, and intelligent men accumulate good vocabularies. It isn't the vocabulary that makes them successful, but the ability to succeed which prompts them to acquire the vocabulary.

Words are the tools we use in thinking. You may have a vague thought before you know the words necessary to express it. But the though doesn't crystallize and become a definite part of your mental equipment until you learn the words that reveal and measure and interpret it.

Every new word means a new thought and a new capacity for thought. If you understood every word in the dictionary, you could comprehend every thought of which man is now capable.

You may know big words and still be a failure; but your equipment of words must grow as your knowledge does, and knowledge enough will make you a success.

Rasputin's Clutch On Czar Revealed

to what the scenes in the film between Natasha and Rasputin were intended to convey."

The court took time out to look at the picture, which was run off for the judge, 82-year-old Justice Horace Avory.

Sir Patrick Hastings, one of the most renowned trial lawyers in England, acted as counsel for the princess. He skillfully led her through a review of events in the Russian court at St. Petersburg from 1913 to 1916. His questioning was designed to show that she then was the czar's only niece and the only Russian princess of her age attending court, thus seeking to establish the identity of the character of Natasha in the film. He then asked:

"In the hospital scene where Natasha tells Chegodieff, 'I have no right to be your wife,' what did that convey to you?"

Wants to Clear Character.

"That she had no right to marry him after what had happened between her and Rasputin," the princess replied.

The defense sought to show that she had tried to reach a cash settlement with the film company, but she denied the charge. The princess declared she only desired to clear her character.

The princess is also suing 288 motion picture theaters in Great Britain. She said she "wanted them to stop showing the film, but they wouldn't." Other suits are pending also in the United States, France, Germany, Austria and Italy, where the film, "Rasputin and the Empress," has been or is showing.

The hearing was adjourned until tomorrow following the princess' testimony.

British Win Italy on Arms; Paris in Doubt

Rome Follows Berlin in Accepting Plan; French Refusal Expected.

Rome, Feb. 27 (AP).—Italy has agreed to accept the British disarmament memorandum, well-informed circles said tonight, as a basis for future discussions.

Germany already has agreed to do likewise and Capt. Anthony Eden, British arms expert, will leave tomorrow to ask France to accept it.

I was learned on reliable authority that as a result of Capt. Eden's conferences with statesmen in Berlin and Rome, Germany, Italy, and Great Britain are in accord on what should be done to prevent an armament race.

Details remain to be worked out will decide the fate of disarmament, quarters close to the government believe.

What Premier Mussolini told Capt. Eden during their conferences that started Monday is in substance, according to qualified observers, as follows:

"We will accept the British memorandum as a basis for discussion.

"If France will accept, we can go ahead and consider disarmament on this foundation. We don't believe France will accept."

An important feature of the British suggestions, as distinguishing them from Italian, French and German memoranda, is that they definitely call for a reduction in arms and not a mere limitation of armaments among heavily armed nations to their present level.

Rome Reclaims Ancient Port

Mouth of Tiber to Be Utilized for Ships as in Days of Trajan.

Rome, (U.P.).—Modern Rome will, have its port on the same site where Claudius and Trajan built theirs. Rome's port will flourish on the right branch of the Tiber. The sea has continuously receded and owing to the extensive deposits of sand and marl, the present mouth of the river is two miles distant from where it was when Claudius lived.

The mouth of the Tiber will be utilized as a harbor and will be connected with the bathing resort, Ostia.

To the right of the present village of Fiumicino, where the artificial arm of the Tiber reaches the sea and where it is deep, since sandbanks are formed in the opposite direction, it is proposed to build a breakwater and quays. Communications with the Tiber will thus be opened and the river will be navigable to steamers of average tonnage as far as St. Pauls Gate in Rome.

The zone of the lower valley of the Tiber will be reclaimed and a port for hydroplanes will be opened there according to present plans.

The direction of the mouth of the new port is the same as that of the Claudian port, which was in use for eight centuries.

Rail Labor Hours Increased.

Topeka, Kans., Feb. 27 (AP).—Santa Fe Railroad officials announced today that effective March 1 and for the balance of this year shop craft employes would be employed on a 4-day week basis rather than three days weekly as at present. Officials estimated approximately 8,000 shop men would benefit.

Many Women Find Glamour In Life of Spy

Followers of Mata Hari Pursue Career for Money, Thrills.

Paris (U.P.).—"The colonel's lady and Judy O'Grady are sisters under the skin"—they are probably both doing a spot of spying.

Footloose and carefree, enough money in their purses to carry them wherever smart crowds always go, an army of women spies swarms over Europe. Living by their wits, these women are in constant battle with the secret police of a dozen nations. They are considered vastly more dangerous than male spies, for there is no card catalogue of these painted beauties as exists for men identified with the industry.

From Mayfair to Marrakeesh there are modern Mata Haris. They may be society favorites, rubbing elbows at fashionable dinners with foreign office or embassy attachés, junior officers of land and sea, or business barons. They may be bobbed-hair denizens of water-front dives.

These battalions of mysterious women have little or no official status. Some of them spy as a profession; others spy because it makes their blood tingle and they get a sensation out of their battles of wits with the world's greatest counter-espionage organizations.

Women Usually Assistants.

They are generally intermediaries between male spies, or they go out on definite assignment to find some specific bit of information, and find rare sport in drawing the knowledge from their victims.

Alleged chief of the recently broken International Spy Syndicate, which French police crushed after months of trailing, was a woman, and an excellently educated woman at that, Lydia Stahl. An artistic painter on silk, inventor of a new system of Swedish exercises, writer of cinema scenarios, a graduate chemist, a mathematician, she was preparing for a degree in Chinese language and history when arrested.

An American girl, just out of Vassar, Mrs. Marjory Talley Switz, was caught up in the swirl of the affair and is still being held by French police, who are trying to determine just what role, if any, she played in the International Syndicate.

"La Belle Sophie" was a barmaid along the German frontier in Alsace; she drew beer for the workers who poured cement for the French border fortifications. She knew every secret which was whispered by the workers. She knew, also, where she could sell the information.

She did sell it, and made enough to quit her job behind the bar; French counter-spies were suspicious of her new-found prosperity and trailed her. When she started across the border by car they caught her and found a new model of a French army automatic gun concealed beneath her skirts. Sophie Drozdt has been in jail for months and her name is never mentioned in print; police say the case is not closed.

She Didn't Know.

Lydia Auspinska was a member of an aristocratic Polish family. She had a weakness for baccarat and played too long at the Zappat Casino one night. Down to her last penny, she accepted temporary financial help from a distinguished-looking gentleman at her elbow, who offered it. To pay it back, she agreed to carry a package to another European capital. When Lydia found out that she was playing the role of carrier pigeon for an international spy band, she went back to Zappat, risked her fortune, won thousands of dollars, paid back her loan, and committed suicide.

Mata Hari was shot at dawn in the moat at Vincennes. She has come down in spy legend as a master spy, a rare beauty, a fatal charmer and a dancer who used her art to ensnare her victims. The truth is far more prosaic: she was clumsy, and her clumsiness led her to the execution post; she was fat and 40, not beautiful, and her supposed Indian dancing gyrations were not much better than those of sideshow dancers anywhere. She failed three times in her stage career before the war.

New Pretender To French Rule Found on Isle

Descendant of Long Lost Dauphin Is Farmer in Azores.

Paris (U.P.).—Another claimant to the Bourban throne—about the fortieth in existence, though one of the most plausible—has been discovered in the Azores.

Hearing that a descendant of the lost Dauphin of France, the little son of Louis XVI, was living on the island of San Miguel, the principal and the prettiest island of the Azores group, L'Illustration of Paris sent a special correspondent, Paul Bartel, from the mainland to investigate his claims. Interest in the fate of the young Dauphin, who was left in the care of the none too scrupulous Simon, has never flagged in France, and any tip, however remote, is considered worth the trouble to investigate, because there are many partisans to the belief that the Dauphin was carried off and hidden, after an easy bargain with his keeper, Simon.

The last pretender to be thus found is a Portuguese subject, Joachim Capeto, born 1868, a farmer in the little village of San Antonio, near Bretanha, where the mysterious "French prince" is supposed to have landed "after a revolt in France." The name of this French prince was Louis Capet (the name of the royal family), and his daughter, Maria, born in 1804, bore Antonio Francisco Vasconcellos, who was the father of the present Joachim Capeto, the family name becoming more Latinized. Joachim Capeto, or Capet, had eight children by his wife Isabella, of whom one is named Louis, and, if the legend is true, would be the Dauphin of France on the Bourban side.

One Living in Belgium.

There is one actual legitimist Dauphin living in Belgium, who is the little son of Prince Henry de Guise, Compte of Paris, the son of the Duc de Guise, the legitimist Orleanist pretender.

The Portuguese "pretender" is hardly a pretender. He admits that he is descended from an austere French prince, who lived as an exile on San Miguel at Bretanha, and who received strange but regular visits from a distinguished person living in a noble family in Ponta Delgada.

Pretender Joachim, however, is more intereted in his crops. When asked by the French representative of L'Illustration what he thought about being related to royalty, he said. "That does not seem to be worth much to me. I would much rather see a good crop this season." But "Prince" Joachim has much to commend him to serious attention of sympathizers. He and his family are blond and blue-eyed, like many of the late Bourbons and certainly like the young Dauphin was said to be. He has the Bourbon physiognomy, except the nose, which is more Roman, but distinguished. He speaks with an air of gravity uncommon in these spontaneous people, and the French writer declares he has certainly an unmistakable air of inherent authority.

Ancestry Easily Traced.

To trace the ancestry of "Prince" Joachim on the island was quite easy, as the father and grandmother lived to great age, and there are ample records of his grandmother, Maria Capet, the natural daughter of this strange exiled prince, called Louis Capet. That appears certain.

The investigation developed that there was an austere prince, who walked somewhat in the manner of Napoleon about the heights of San Miguel, and that his visitor was a certain J. V. Schemoll, who constructed the clock in the Church of Provoacao, in San Miguel, and who was supposed to have been the clock maker to Louis XVI.

There are ample traces of Schemoll, as a gentleman, but no traces of Schemoll as clockmaker to Louis XVI, although as the protector of the Dauphin, Louis Capet, he would have changed his name. French readers, however, give much credence to this discovery and its plausibility.

Daily Talk About Books and Authors.

"A Suburban Pastoral."

I am afraid the book is out of print; perhaps you can pick it up at a second-hand bookshop, or perhaps you can find it in the nearest public library. "A Suburban Pastoral" is the name of a book of short stories, which takes title from the first piece. The author, Henry A. Beers, was for many years professor of English literature at Yale. I am sure that "A Surburban Pastoral" is one of the best stories ever written in American. It is shattering to one's pride, but the reader knows it is true. The ordinary regulation American magazine story flatters one's pride, and one does not ask whether it is true or not. But no man ever read Prof. Beer's tale without fear—fear that just such an experience would be his, if he had the bad luck to be caught in such an emergency.

A young man who was not a magnificent athlete, but just an average youth, and handicapped in a rough-and-tumble fight by being so near-sighted that he had to wear glasses, took a young girl out for a long walk. They wandered in the meadows outside the town, and though no word of love was spoken, both were aware of each other, both knew an engagement was coming. They stayed out so long that when they got back to the city it was dusk. As they drew near a corner of a shabby street they saw a group of toughs. Instantly silence fell—the calm before the storm. The young gentleman hoped the girl would walk faster, but she seemed to walk even more slowly. Just as they were about to pass the group the insults began to fly. "Look at Foureyes" "Why don't you kiss her, Mister?" The man tried to walk a little faster. The girl said nothing. Then one of the rowdies took a quid of tobacco from his mouth, threw it and hit the girl on the cheek. She brushed it off in horror. The man turned and glared at the crowd. They roared with laughter at him, inviting him to come on. In impotent rage, he looked at them through his spectacles. Then the girl said the one unpardonable thing: "Oh, how I wish a man were here!"

They walked on, followed by jeers and laughter. He "saw her home" and both knew it was the end.

In popular stories, the young lover is a magnificent athlete, who knocks big fellows down with careless ease. But in real life few men are magnificent athletes, and big toughs are not so willing to be eliminated. The young man in this story had imagination. Thoughts flashed through his mind as he glared at his tormentors. He would gladly have died for the girl—even for his pride, for many have died for that—but he saw himself down, and the girl at the mercy of the gang. His imagination even more than his physical limitations made him helpless. Perhaps his chivalry—although the girl thought just the opposite—was the real reason for his humiliation. For he thought more of the girl than of himself.

Tomorrow—"Love Letters of a Wordly Woman."

The news that golf will be spread in Germany by Nazi decree came as a great blow to Von Hindenburg. The old field marshal didn't get his laurels looking for lost balls in those Mazurian lakes.

* * * *

And former Kaiser Wilhelm went into a wood-pile tailspin the minute he heard the news that German youths would do their future dueling with mashie-niblicks.

* * * *

Rumors that Hitler would recall the Kaiser as a caddie are denied.

* * * *

And no official information is obtainable on the story that the Krupps are turning out golf balls, incidentally experimenting with a long-range brassie that will shoot 70 miles.

* * * *

One thing is certain; there can be no hope of peace in Europe with millions of Germans going through the ordeal of learning golf and arguing over whether they had three or six putts on the last green.

* * * *

This is the first time in world history that a people went through a revolution and achieved minimum links fees.

* * * *

The Hitler reply to reports that the people are still hungry is, "Let them eat divots!"

* * * *

Before golf can really get under way in Germany there will have to be Nazi rules to govern it, of course. Adolf will probably proclaim a special backswing for those of pure Aryan stock and issue an imperial decree revoking waterhole penalties in the case of Germans with approved blood lines.

* * * *

The orthodox golfing costume will consist of white linen shorts with an iron helmet, military boots and a golf bag that will carry six days' rations and trench tools.

* * * *

We welcome golf to Germany. But we predict it will be abolished by official edict the first time Adolf swings at a ball in front of the club house and misses.

London Tense As Marchers Refuse to Leave

Insist Demands Must Be Heard; MacDonald Won't See Them.

London, Feb. 27 (U.P.).—London was uneasy tonight as thousands of "hunger marchers" and Communist sympathizers refused to depart until their case had been laid before the House of Commons. Parliament was heavily guarded.

Several hundred escorted a delegation of six to No. 10 Downing street and demanding to see Prime Minister MacDonald, despite his earlier rejection of their demands. They were led by James Maxton and John McGovern, Scottish Labor members of Parliament.

They were received by Graham Vincent, MacDonald's private secretary, who told them MacDonald "unfortunately" was absent. Maxton said they considered his absence "a grave insult," but the party left without violence.

Few Go to Parliament.

Scotland Yard operatives mingled with the throngs, and thousands of police were kept on duty. Inside Parliament, plainclothes guards in the gallery of the House were doubled.

The marchers mostly remained away from Parliament, although a few entered quietly and were invited to tea by members from their districts.

McGovern returned and presented a petition to allow the marchers to be heard before the bar of the House. MacDonald refused, whereupon a motion was carried to debate the prime minister's refusal. The argument proceeded quietly tonight.

Violence Feared.

The march on Downing street caused rising apprehension that the thousands would not leave without violent demonstrations. Their parade was heavily guarded. The delegation members said they knew the prime minister had announced he would refuse to see them, but one remarked:

"We are determined to obtain entry—that's all that matters."

We Preview "Dr. Bull," "The Poor Relation," as "David Harum" in Rogers Hit!

Westcott Book Of Gay 90s Is Filmed by Fox

Will Divert Younger Fans; Elmer Rice to Lecture; January Champions.

Reprinted from Yesterday's Last Edition.

By Nelson B. Bell.

A too tenacious memory is not always to be numbered among the major assets of habitual novel reading and professional playgoing. First impressions are apt to be too firmly fixed and original stage recreations of favorite characters from between the covers of books too vividly visible to the mind's eye.

Take, for example, the late Edward Noyes Westcott's novel of "David Harum."

To the present generation the Fox picturization of the Westcott story, starring Will Rogers and soon to be seen on local screens, no doubt will prove a tremendous box-office triumph, much after the fashion of "Dr. Bull," also starring Mr. Rogers, which succeeded in completely eluding the point of the book from which it was adapted. But to those who still cherish fragrant memories of the novel, which achieved the "best-seller" class back about the turn of the century, and of William H. Crane's stage portrayal of the famous small-town banker, philosopher and horse trader, in a period so remote as to be remembered only by the veteran theatergoer, the new version may fall a little farther this side of perfection.

Divided Opinion.

This was emphasized at the preview of "David Harum" in the projection room of the Fox Film Exchange yesterday morning. Those to whom the story came as a new and fresh experience were loud in its praise. The others, who had read the book and seen its performance on the stage of the living theater, were not so sure. Presumably these latter will be vastly in the minority when the film is presented on F street for public consumption in the near future.

Its success, therefore, seems assured, for in the detached view, "David Harum" is a homely, sentimental, big-hearted speciman of pithy and amusing hokum that abounds in the simple virtues that have always spelled success at the box-office—as witness "The Old Homestead," "Shore Acres," "Way Down East" and all the other old standbys that thrived season after season back in the so-called gay '90', in which "David Harum" also is set and with which it exclusively deals.

Star Plays Himself.

The complaint which will be lodged against the picture by the old-timers, whose familiarity with David is a little greater than that of those who have never heard of him before, will be that Will Rogers is not the crisp, shrewd, kindly, Calvin Coolidge type of typical Yankee that Harum really was. Will Rogers, in whatever role he may be cast, always plays Will Rogers, although he may be called "The Poor Relation," "Jubilo," "Dr. Bull," "A Connecticut Yankee in King Arthur's Court," "Mr. Skitch" or anything else you like.

As David Harum he puts on a swell show, but he is not David Harum any more than he would be Hamlet or Sherlock Holmes if he were to essay those characters. He is Will Rogers and nobody else.

Now that we have audibility in our cinema this is not so bad. Rogers depends wholly upon audibility for any sort of comic or climacteric effect. He is not an actor, but a comic philospher, who must be heard—not seen—to be enjoyed.

This is demonstrable by a quick reversion to the old days of the silent picture, when Mr. Rogers was no smash hit on the screen, even with the advantage of subtitles of his own composition. On the vaudeville, musical comedy or revue stage, a riot; on the silent screen, perhaps not a flop, but certainly no overpowering sensation.

Excellent Support.

So admirers of Will Rogers will proportionately admire "David Harum," which seems fair enough. Indeed, it may be even fairer than that, in view of the excellent supporting cast by which the star has been surrounded.

In the romantic leads of Ann Woolsey and John Lennox are the two who created so favorable an impression in comparable assignments with Dorothea Wieck in Paramount's production of "Cradle Song," Evelyn Venable and Kent Taylor. Louise Dresser, with Rogers also in "State Fair," is cast as David's maiden sister, Polly, and Charles Middleton as the horse-trading deacon. Noah Beery has a small part in the picture's early action and Stepin Fetchit, who will reach the local screen first in support of Lionel Barrymore and Janet Gaynor in "Carolina," on Friday, appears in a slightly more comprehensible part as an harassed stable boy.

In "Carolina," I regret to say, Mr. Fetchit, king of sloths, is almost completely unintelligible—or, at least, he was to these probably failing ears when they preauditioned him.

But getting back to the main issue, if you have never made the acquaintance of "David Harum," under no consideration let this opportunity slip.

It probably is less to be blamed upon James Cruze, the director of "David Harum," than attributed to the complexity of cutting and assembling feature pictures that a glaring fault obtrudes itself in the scene immediately following the fight in front of the village bank. David Harum goes to great pains to rearrange his necktie while in conversation With Miss Venable and Mr. Taylor. In one flash it is fixed, in the next it is completely disarranged again and in the next adjusted in a totally different manner, all without ever having been touched but the once. It is little things like these that make big paragraphs like this!

A Toast in Cooking Sherry to an Idol of the Past!

A scene typical of the old aristocracy gone to seed that sounds the keynote of the gripping drama revealed in "Carolina," the screen version of Paul Green's "The House of Connelly," a tense and bitter indictment of a vanishing order. Left to right, Lionel Barrymore, Alden Chase, Almeda Fowler, Henrietta Crosman, Mona Barrie and Robert Young. "Carolina" opens at Loew's Palace on Friday.

The correct continuity evidently was left on the cutting room floor, along with all those faces you have heard so much about.

January Champs.

The "Box Office Champions" for January, as determined by the Motion Picture Herald's monthly poll of actual key-city receipts throughout the country, were about what might have been expected.

Six pictures are included in the list, first and second places being undisputed and two each tied for third and fourth. Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer is the only production company to have two entries among the champs for the first month of the new year.

First place, as was to have been expected, went to M.-G.-M.'s all-star "Dinner at Eight." "Flying Down to Rio," RKO-Radio's gorgerous musical, with its tantalizing "Carioca" and featuring Dolores Del Rio, Gene Raymond, Fred Astaire and Ginger Rogers, accounted for second place. Paramount's "Design for Living," with Frederic March, Miriam Cooper and Gary Cooper, and Eddie Cantor, in United Artists' "Roman Scandals"—also a December champion—tied for third and M.-G.-M.'s "Dancing Lady"—likewise a December champ—and Universal's "By Candlelight" ended in a deadlock for fourth.

All of these nationally approved attractions have been seen in the Capital and accorded practically unanimous critical acclaim. They're that kind of pictures.

I can think of no sounder solution of how not to grow old than for the motion picture wisecrackers to keep on pulling the one about George Burns and Gracie Allen conversing—if that is what they do—on the Paramount lot recently. Said George: "Gracie, don't you think we ought to take out some fire insurance?" To which Gracie replied: "Heavens, George, why? We've got contracts. They can't fire us!"

By the way, Joe Miller, who was that lady I seen you walking down the street with yesterday?

Playwright to Speak.

"The Future of the Theater" will be the topic of a lecture to be delivered for the first time before a Washington audience tonight by Elmer Rice, famous playwright, producer and author and winner of the Pulitzer prize for the best American drama in 1929.

Mr. Rice, who is on a Nation-wide lecture tour, will speak in the National Jewish Forum at the Jewish Community Center, beginning at 8:15 o'clock. He will be introduced by Mr. E. de S. Melcher. Mrs. Adolph Kahn, of the Educational Committee of the Center, will preside.

Trained originally as a lawyer, Elmer Rice is looked upon as one of America's eminent playwrights. Some of his plays have reflected his early training, notably his first, "On Trial," and "Counsellor at Law," in which Paul Muni starred so successfully on the stage and John Barrymore on the screen. At 40 he is the author of some 15 plays, many of which have been published in book form and translated into many foreign languages.

Tonight's lecture will be open to the public.

"Smoke in Your Eyes."

It is suggested that the speaker should call his lecture "Riz la Croix," since, so far as Washington is concerned, it is the original Rice paper!

Caroline returned home yesterday from the hospital, where she had been treated for a severe cold contracted while she was bound in the woods nearly a mile from her Stafford County home.

"Hoax means a fake, a lie," Mr. Musante said in commenting on Judge Coleman's order. "Well, who is the liar, Caroline, myself or Lonnie, her brother? Credits Shown At Krol Trial As Embezzler

Winchester Woolen Firm's Treasurer Said to Have Ordered Payments.

By C. B. Carr.

Winchester, Va., Feb. 27.—Commonwealth's Attorney James P. Reardon at the adjournment of Corporation Court here today announced that the State was about ready to rest its case against Max Krol, with only one more witness to be called tomorrow.

Krol, former treasurer and selling agent of the defunct Arthur G. Jones Woolen Co. here, is being tried on a charge of embezzling $4,312 from the firm. Reardon charged that Krol has been a fugitive since 1929, when the indictments were issued.

Shortly after Judge Philip Williams denied a motion by defense to quash the indictments, the prosecution began presenting its evidence.

Defense Counsel Kern & Kern, Winchester, and W. C. Armstrong, Front Royal, had demurred to the indictments, claiming the alleged larceny covered four years, whereas Virginia statute declares that an embezzlement charge is limited by a six months period.

W. A. Carskaden, of High Point, N. C., former general bookkeeper of the Jones company, was shown ledger sheets indicating credits to Krol from Jones Co. funds. The witness said Krol had ordered the credits made.

Among the credits were one of $1,500 for 1,000 miles of travel; another of $2,050 for organization expenses, and a third of $2,670.92 as a bonus for goods sold by Krol.

City Sergt. C. Lee Barr, Winchester, told of Krol's arrest in Long Beach, Long Island, last January; he described Krol's subsequent jumping of bail bond and Krol's final return to Virginia after he had been captured in Chicago. Defense counsel declared that good reason would be shown for Krol's disappearance.

G. S. Kidwell, of Hagerstown, a certified public accountant, who audited the books of the Jones Corporation in 1929, testified as to his findings.

Although the defense lost two motions yesterday—one for a change of venue and a second for a demurrer to the indictments—it gained today when Judge Williams instructed the jury that when considering the withdrawal of funds from the Jones firm by Krol, the jury must consider his intent in doing so, as the Commonwealth must provide criminal liability of Krol. Defense counsel declared that Krol made all withdrawals from the Jones funds in good faith.

'3 Best Men' Sought For Liquor Board

Peery Delays Signing Bill Until Author Checks It.

Richmond, Feb. 27 (AP).—Gov. George C. Peery said today he would appoint three men whom he regards as of high character and ability to the powerful alcoholic beverage control board, created by the control bill, which is now waiting to be signed.

The Governor said he expected to sign the bill soon but declined to say just when.

In his appointments to the A. B. C. B. the governor will not be bound by geographical lines, he said, but will make his selections with a view to finding the three men best fitted to direct Virginia's entry into the State liquor dispensary system.

He said signing of the bill was being delayed by the illness of William R. Shands, director of research and statutory drafting. Shands acted as secretary of the control commission, which drew the bill in its original form before it was amended by the legislature. The measure will be checked by Mr. Shands before the Governor signs it.

Davis and Elkins Estates Upheld

Court Bars Claims Made by Railroad Syndicate.

Charleston, W. Va., Feb. 27 (Spl.). Affirming a ruling of the Randolph County Circuit Court, the State supreme court today held that application of the statute of limitations halted the collection of claims by Henry Davis and others against the estates of Henry G. Davis and Stephen B. Elkins.

The circuit court found for the Davis Trust Co., executor of the estates, in an action filed by Davis and others as managers of the Little Kanawha Syndicate.

The cases involved assessments by the syndicate against the estates for moneys used in carrying on business of the organization formed to purchase the Little Kanawha Railroad and to construct a railroad from Parkersburg to Zanesville, Ohio. It was contended actions on claims after five years in unwritten agreements could not be maintained.

Roosevelt Invited To View Ceremony

Norfolk, Va., Feb. 27 (Spl.). President Roosevelt today was invited to attend the pilgrimage to Cape Henry April 26, commemorating the landing of the first settlers at Jamestown Island. The invitation was extended by a committee of 30 of the Assembly of Tidewater Virginia women.

The General Assembly, at its present session, adopted a resolution asking Gov. George C. Peery to extend the invitation to President and Mrs. Roosevelt. When the Governor goes to Washington for this purpose he will be accompanied by a committee from the Tidewater Assembly.

If April 26 is not suitable to the President, it will be changed to April 29.

While pruning trees near his home, Knisely forgot while sawing the limb of a tree that he was standing on the limb and sawed it in two.

Plunging through the roof of a small building, Knisely landed in a trough of water, suffering a sprained back besides getting a chilly bath.

Jury Indicts Two in Deaths

Hit-Run Driving Charge and Stabbing Among Staunton Bills.

Staunton, Va., Feb. 27 (Spl.). Lester E. Tolley and Austin Thompson were among 21 persons indicted by a grand jury in Augusta Circuit Court yesterday, as the February term got under way.

Tolley is indicted on a charge of manslaughter, accused of being the driver of an automobile which struck and killed Kilmer Wilson, 23, at West View on the night of January 28. The car which hit Wilson did not stop. Next day Tolley was arrested. County officers say Tolley admitted being the driver, but claimed the striking of Wilson was an accident, and that after the crash he "lost his head" and drove away instead of stopping.

Austin Thompson, 47, was indicted on a charge of murder, accused of stabbing to death Richard Dull, 27, at the home of Harper Monroe on the night of December 17.

Twelve of the 22 indictments were for alleged violations of the prohibition law. Leonard Showker and W. A. Campbell each were named in two true bills.

CWA Workers Assigned to New Project.

Danville, Va., Feb. 27 (Spl.).—Under special authorization from Richmond, 200 CWA workers were switched from regular projects to to snow removal today. They continued in double shifts tonight.

Slow progress was made, for the mercury dropped to 8 degrees last night and did not rise above 20.

Linemen continued laboring today to restore communications, raising poles, splicing wires and repairing additional damage which came last night when a high wind toppled ice encrusted trees and poles, severing power lines. Long-distance lines were available north and west of here today.

Ships Tied Up By Record Ice In Chesapeake

All Markers Valueless; Coast Guard Swamped by Calls for Help.

Norfolk, Va., Feb. 27 (Spl.).—Chesapeake Bay and its tributary rivers are without reliable markers as a result of ice, according to a report to Coast Guard headquarters here today. Ice conditions are the worst in the memory of some of the oldest fishermen.

From Maryland Point to Washington most of the buoys have been either destroyed or pushed out of position by floating ice. Spar buoys have been badly cut.

The lighthouse depot has removed some of the lighted buoys to prevent them being destroyed. Ice pressure was so great at the Maryland Point Lighthouse that the keeper was obliged to remove the electric light and substitute an ordinary lantern from a hinge.

Floating Ice Menaces Ships.

The lighthouse tender Speedwell, arriving today from a trip up the bay, reports ice so thick and high at Love Point Station, at the mouth of Chester River, that it is possible to step from a boat to the lighthouse gallery, which is about two stories high.

The Speedwell removed a sick guardian from the Love Point station and took him to a Baltimore hospital. Another ill keeper was taken from the Tangier station.

Coast Guard headquarters received a report from Crisfield that ice was a foot thick there and in upper portions of the bay. Ships seeking anchorage outside the ice area are menaced by collisions with huge floating floes.

Navigation Markers Wrecked.

The Old Bay Line today sailed the steamer State of Maryland from Norfolk for Baltimore. It was the only vessel leaving here for the Maryland port. The Norfolk & Washington company maintained its regular service to Washington. Navigation markers wrecked today in the bay include those at Love Point, Higgins Point, Buzzard Point, Port Tobacco, the River Flats light in the Potomac and Knapps Narrows, east entrance Wicomico River, and Clay Island Shoals' and Bishop Island Shoals lights.

The Coast Guard was swamped by requests for assistance from ice-bound harbors in the bay. The cutters Apache and Reliance were busy. Two patrol boats were ordered from Chincoteague to duty in the bay.

State Will Allow Seized Land Use

West Virginia Officials to Overlook Violations.

Clarksburg, W. Va., Feb. 27 (Spl.). In spite of laws preventing it, many tracts of forfeited land coming into possession of the State through delinquent taxes will be utilized for subsistence plots this spring and summer.

Under the law, such lands may not be used for any practical purpose, nor may permission be given to anybody else to so use it. But, as hundreds of distressed persons have been seeking permission from the State auditor's office to use the forfeited lands for gardening, officials are going to "shut their eyes" and let them plant gardens.

Boys Escape

Danville, Va., Feb. 27 (Spl.). Three 14-year-old boys, held for the juvenile court authorities, who declined to list their names, cut their way out of the city hall detention room early today.

One was a fugitive from an Oklahoma reform school, a second was a runaway from Greensboro, N. C., and the third a Greensboro boy charged with stealing a doctor's car here.

They cut through the plaster wall of one detention room into another, then broke a glass door and escaped from the city building before police, who heard the crash of glass, responded.

Body to Study Waters Planned

Virginia House Bill Is Favored; Oyster Rental Slash Proposed.

Richmond, Feb. 27 (AP).—The House committee on the Chesapeake and its tributaries this afternoon approved a bill creating a five-man body to be known as the Virginia commission for the purification of waters. The measure is sponsored by Delegates E. T. Humphries and Edward L. Oast.

The duties of the commissioners, under the bill, would be to study causes and effects of pollution in the tidal waters of the Chesapeake Bay area and to make recommendations or to contract with the Federal Government for the erection of sewage disposal plants with the approval of local governing bodies.

The bill was reported out by the committee after a similar bill also sponsored by Delegates Humphries and Oast, had been pigeonholed.

A bill to reduce annual rental of polluted oyster grounds from $1 to 25 cents per acre, introduced by Delegate John T. Duval, provoked considerable interest. Members asked if he would be willing to amend the bill to make it applicable to the whole State instead of only the York River. Mr. Duval agreed and it was held for further discussion. It was estimated that between 8,000 and 9,000 acres of Virginia oyster ground were polluted.

Koons Acquitted In Wife's Death

Killing Called Accidental by Accused Husband.

Hagerstown, Md., Feb. 27 (Spl.). A jury late today acquitted E. Russell Koons of a charge of slaying his wife, Katherine, after Koons testified the shooting in their apartment was an accident, caused when his wife struggled with him for possession of a revolver.

A quarrel over a ring which he lost preceded the shooting, Koons testified. The only other defense witness was Vernon L. Buck, auto salesman, who said Koons came to the garage and telephoned for an ambulance. Koons said that after his wife was shot, he turned the gun on himself and slightly wounded himself.

Testimony by County Investigator Martin Lingram that Mrs. Koons had told him at the hospital that her husband had shot her after saying "I'm going to shoot you," which the defense sought to exclude, was admitted as evidence.

Snow Maroons Aviator Who Strayed in Storm

Clifton Forge, Va., Feb. 27 (Spl.). As a result of the 14-inch snow here, Kenneth Tibets, of Bradford, Pa., who made a forced landing in an airplane here Saturday, has been forced to postpone his departure indefinitely.

Mr. Tibets, a representative of the Taylor Aircraft Co., of Bradford, was on his way to Winston-Salem, N. C., and had reached Buchanan, when he lost his bearings and followed the Chesapeake & Ohio tracks into this city instead of the Norfolk & Western into Roanoke.

Virginia Hopes To Keep Fund From Danville

$3,000,000 PWA Cash Rejected Is Sought by Other Cities.

Richmond, Feb. 27 (AP).—That the $3,000,000 of public works funds allotted to Danville, Va., for the creation of a municipal hydroelectric power plant and rejected by that community at the polls yesterday, would be reallocated to other Virginia cities was the hope expressed by State public works officials here today.

The Danville grant was the largest made to any Virginia community under the President's works program. As a result of yesterday's vote the money is to be returned to the PWA treasury. Thus the money may be awarded to other States. Officials were hopeful, however, that at least a part of it would be spent in other Virginia works projects.

The State advisory board of the PWA was scheduled to hold what may be its last meeting here tomorrow when ten remaining projects will be acted on. The ten call for loans and grants totaling $500,000.

The projects are::

Liberty Limestone Co. of Rocky Point, loan of $30,000, for construction of toll bridge over James River in Botetourt County; Portsmouth Bus Terminal, Inc., loan of $30,000 for construction of bus terminal at Portsmouth; Craig Telephone Co., Inc., of New Castle, loan of $1,590, for telephone plant improvements.

Pound Sanitary District, pound, loan and grant of $23,500, for water works improvements; town of Marion, loan and grant of $221,000 for municipal power plant; town of Buchanan, loan and grant of $52,449.90 for waterworks improvements; St. Agnes School for Girls, Inc., of Alexandria, loan of $30,000 for dormitory.

Town of Cedar Bluff, loan and grant of $52,000 for waterworks system; Portsmouth King's Daughter's Hospital, loan of $35,000 for nurses' home; town of Fincastle, loan and grant of $38,000 for waterworks system.

Aid Requests Are Increased By Cold Wave

CWA Disappointing, More Funds to Be Sought in Virginia.

Fredericksburg, Va., Feb. 27 (Spl.).—The 8-inch snow caused the Federal Emergency Relief Bureau here to be swamped with appeals for relief for destitute families.

Miss Ann Saunders, regional relief supervisor, and Mrs. Alis Loehr Bailey, temporary relief director in charge of the local FERA have been investigating applicants.

The city's poor face their most serious predicament in recent years, with the Salvation Army finances depleted. Food clothing, and wood have been the most demanded forms of relief.

Four Jobs Sought.

Winchester, Va., Feb. 27 (Spl.). City Manager P. P. Pilcher has filed four new applications for CWA funds with W. F. Day, CWA district administrator.

Two applications are for sewer extensions, while the other two are for additional allocations on the Berryville and Milldale roads jobs.

The airport project, for which application was made a few weeks ago, is under consideration in the Richmond office.

Roanoke CWA Cut.

Roanoke, Feb. 27 (Spl.).—A reduction of 25 per cent in civil works forces in District 8 was announced by W. B. Rogan, district engineer, yesterday. Reductions are from 50 per cent at Bristol to 4 per cent in Roanoke City.

CWS projects on which 134 women are at work in Roanoke will be transferred to the CWA classification and will be subject to future decreases in personnel, Mr. Rogan said. The peak CWA employment in the district was 16,602 on January 18.

More Money Sought.

Clifton Forge, Va., Feb. 27 (Spl.). Disappointed in the latest allotment to this city for CWA work, the city council will make an effort to secure an increased allotment both for the city and the State.

The latest allotment provides for the employment of only 88 persons while 188 have been carried on pay rolls during recent weeks. There are still 400 unemployed here.

Allotment Reduced.

Covington, Va., Feb. 27 (Spl.). CWA allotments for this district for this week will reduce the pay roll from 391 to 317, of these 285 are men and 32 women. Last week's pay roll was $3,366.39.

Monongahela Adds Big Forest Area

Becomes Second Largest Throughout East.

Parsons, W. Va., Feb. 27 (Spl.).—With the purchases of 724,374 additional acres of land approved, the Monongahela National Forest here will become the second largest east of the Mississippi. The tracts scattered in six counties further connect the scattered boundaries of the forest. The price was $146,934.95.

Most of the land purchased is located in Tucker County, near this city, while other tracts lie in Randolph, Pocahontas, Greenbrier and Pendleton Counties. The new acquisition completed about half of the estimated quota to be optioned by the Monongahela Forest. Lands in Clover District, near here, are included in the purchase.

Since June over 228,000 acres have been added to the forest. The only Eastern forest as large is the White Mountain, in Vermont.

BAKER.

NEW MEXICO holds the stage today in the Federal Diary's Parade of the States. The Sunshine State has quite a large quota of prominent sons and daughters in the National Capital.

Next in the Parade of the States will be Florida, internationally famous for her winter resorts and fruits. Progressive Florida is well represented in Washington, a number of her citizens holding key positions in the New Deal.

All Federal employes are invited to send in items about fellow workers from their home States. In order that all interesting people of each State will be included in the Diary's Parade, we urge that citizens of all States assist in furnishing lists of their prominent home folks now in Government service, and as much information about each one as possible.

Watch for your State in the parade!

Here's to New Mexico!

Where most every town bears a Spanish name,
Where the Santa Fe trail of historic fame
Once stretched away to the setting sun,
O'er mesa and butte, up dry canyon.
That's the Sunshine State of New Mexico.
With its mountains, plains, deserts and snow;
With its copper, silver, oil and gold,
Its livestock, farming, its heat and cold;
With its Carlsbad Caverns, cotton, mines,
And tourist camps near the railway lines—
The State with a motto that every one knows,
It's indeed a truth—"She grows as she goes!"

A vast empire of mountain and plain is New Mexico, the Sunshine State. Boasting a history conceived in dimmest antiquity, and a modern glory that intrigues the imagination, it nestles contentedly on the Mexican border in a fanciful Western setting of turquoise skies, blazing sunsets, lofty heights and magnificent distances. It is a land enchanted—the haven of thrilling adventure, of new interest and ultimate content.

Settled in 1537, the earliest outpost of American civilization, it was not until January 6, 1912, that New Mexico was admitted to the sisterhood of States the forty-seventh of the Union. It comprises an area of 122,634 square miles, the fourth largest State, and has a population of 450,000. Its principal cities are Albuquerque, Santa Fe, Las Vegas, Roswell, Clovis, Raton, Las Cruces and Silver City. The capital is Santa Fe, "The Ancient City of the Holy Faith," a city of unique charm and culture. Santa Fe is recognized as the oldest seat of government in North America, having enjoyed that rare distinction for almost 400 years, successively under Spanish, Mexican and American rule.

Harris & Ewing Photos.

A Nordic youth and a beautiful Spanish-American girl have been chosen as a typical New Mexico young couple in Federal service for the Diary's Parade of the States. Miss Frances Tafoya, Administrative Division, PWA, is from Santa Fe. She was educated at Loretto Academy and also attended business school in Santa Fe. Stanley W. P. Miller, accountant, at RFC, is from Belen. He is a graduate of the Univeristy of New Mexico and is studying law at George Washington University.

Mountains of the Continental Divide, including the magnificent Sangre de Criste, "Blood of Christ" range, studded with glistening snow tipped peaks, traverse the central and western portions of the State from its northern to southern boundaries. In the entire eastern half of the State far-reaching mesas and vast plains abound. The mountain regions are prolific in mineral wealth and timber, and afford almost unlimited grazing range for the State's gigantic sheep industry. Coal, copper, iron, zinc and lead are produced on a large scale, while the mining of gold and silver has always been one of the State's important industries, and recently a most active one.

Precious stones, too, mainly turquoise and garnet, are profitably mined. On the plains—the locale of many a saga of daring adventures where the thrilling history of the West was written—the cowboy still rides herd over vast cattle ranges. In the spacious valleys agriculture in widely varied form is carried on under extensively developed irrigation projects. Oil is being produced in ever increasing quantity throughout the State.

During 1933 the mines of New Mexico produced $536,724 in gold, $409,216 in silver, $1,744,896 in copper, $796,869 in lead, $2,697,347 in zinc. Nearly 1,225,000 tons of coal were mined, while the oil wells yielded 14,074,000 barrels. The huge sheep industry produced 16,185,000 pounds of wool. At the end of 1933 there were 2,820,000 sheep and 1,167,000 cattle on the State ranges.

Culturally, New Mexico has reached a high level of development, particularly in the field of education and art. It maintains a State university at Albuquerque, a school of mines at Socorro, a college of agriculture at Las Cruces and teachers' colleges at Las Vegas, Silver City and El Rito. An outstanding military college is located at Roswell. Numerous Indian schools are maintained throughout the state by the federal government. At Santa Fe is a famous museum of art and natural history. The National Institute of American Archaeology also is in Santa Fe. Noted art colonies flourish at Taos, Santa Fe and Albuquerque.

Numerous points of unusual interest are reached at any time of the year by inviting trails and modern highways. The State has 35,784 miles of roads of which 3,621 are hard surface, including the old Sante Fe trail. In the mountain regions in the North and West, communal cave dwellings, prehistoric ruins, Indian villages, hot springs, mountain resorts, lakes, streams and virgin forests intrigue the vacationist and the tourist. In the plains country colorful mesas, large cattle ranches, vast dry salt lakes and the great Carlsbad Caverns, the country's largest cave, vie with the mountain attractions for tourist interest.

There is a lure to New Mexico's scenery and climate, its history of romance and adventure; its recreation and health appeal. It has unlimited opportunities for business and pleasure. The mountains abound with game and fish. The low humidity, high altitude and bright sunshine form a climate that is a guarantee of comfort for the pleasure seeker and a promise of regained health to the sick. Many afflicted with bronchial and pulmonary ills have recovered in modern sanatoria in the State.

New Mexico's quaint Indian life, ancient pueblos and rare architecture are points of unending interest, and the inspiration for many a canvas adorning museums and drawing rooms the world over. Verily, it is a land of delight and opportunity—this New Mexico.

Three of the most prominent legislators on Capitol Hill are from New Mexico. Left, Senator Bronson Cutting, Progressive Republican, of Santa Fe, is a member of six committees. He supported President Roosevelt in the 1932 campaign. Center, Representative Dennis Chavez, Democrat, of Albuquerque, is chairman of the House Irrigation and Reclamation Committee and member of two others. Right, Senator Carl A. Hatch, Democrat, of Covlis, was appointed last October to fill the vacancy caused by the resignation of Senator Sam G. Bratton.

Party Marks Anniversary Of Caswells

Younger Society Members Assemble to Extend Congratulations.

Tea Provides Rendezvous for Gayety, Flouting Winter Gloom.

By Evelyn Peyton Gordon.

One of the most delightful parties of the week was the tea given Monday afternoon by Mr. and Mrs. John Caswell, jr., in celebration of their seventh wedding anniversary.

"Johnnie" and "Betsy" Caswell are probably the most popular couple in the smart younger set, and Mrs. Caswell is certainly the most beautiful member of a large group. Monday's party was proof of their popularity.

The drawing room of their apartment was cozy and bright with groups of gay young people gathered around the open fire. In one corner of the room at a small table sat Mrs. Caswell's young daughter, Margaret Lansdowne, daughter of the late Commander Zachary Lansdowne, pouring tea for scores of young men who preferred tea to cocktails because they were anxious to make the acquaintance of the popular Betsy's child. And "Ditto," small son of Mr. and Mrs. Caswell, was there, immaculate in a dark blue suit and starched Buster Brown collar, bowing to each lady and making himself useful by passing a large silver bowl of pop corn.

Conversational Salon.

Mrs. Caswell wore a tea gown of palest hyacinth blue satin fashioned with flowing sleeves and a long train, and alternated the corsage of gardenias with one of orchids during the afternoon. Yellow roses, freesias and pale tulips were in vases and bowls in the drawing room and dining room, and the corsages of various kinds suggested a very popular debutante.

Mrs. Rose Merriam held a small court in one corner of the room, where she was chatting with Mrs. William P. MacCracken, jr., Mrs. Forbes Morgan and Mr. Edward Gardner. Mrs. Morgan wore a costume interestingly summery for the chill weather of Monday; a soft knitted suit of white wool with a cherry-red belt and a white Panama hat with a turned-up brim and a cherry band. In another group were Mme. Simopoulos, wife of the Minister of Greece, chatting with Mr. Albert Dewey, jr., and Mrs. Mathews Dick, and later joined by Mme. de Lima e Silva, who arrived with her husband, the Ambassador of Brazil, and Mme. de Cardenas, wife of the Ambassador of Spain.

Mrs. Curtis B. Dall, wearing a smart black costume, came early and remained for a long time greeting friends and adding much to the gayety of the party. The Assistant Secretary of the Treasury, Mr. Lawrence W. Robert, jr., received congratulations on all sides for the dance he had given on Saturday night, and which was "the" party of the month, judging from the conversation.

An Operatic Puzzle.

In the dining room a group of men leaned on the mantle and discussed the affairs of state. In the group were Mr. George Garrett, Mr. Blaise de Sibour, Mr. Griffith Warfield, Rear Admiral Mark L. Bristol, Mr. U. Grant Smith and Mr. Emmons Smith.

Two of the most handsome women in the company were the nieces of Mrs. Alvin T. Hert, who are spending several weeks in town; Miss Mary Louise Gurham, who wore a brown coat trimmed with mink and a wide-brimmed sailor hat with a cockade of ostrich, and Miss Jane Aley, looking very much like her handsome aunt, and wearing a large black velvet hat with white feather pom-poms on the front, and a smart black gown.

The three bachelors of the Italian Embassy, Signor Bartolomeo Migone, Signor Giuseppe Tommasi and Signor Andrea Ferrera, were there, deeply engrossed in a conversation about the forthcoming costume ball which they will give at the embassy April 7. The embassy staff will go as a group representing the characters of an opera, which opera they will not say. The members are getting their costumes from the Metropolitan Opera. Mr. and Mrs. Caswell will attend with the embassy group, and it is whispered that Mr. Caswell will represent a jolly monk. What can the opera be?

Mr. and Mrs. Rufus Graves Mather will entertain at dinner this evening at the Mayflower preceding the Italy America Society meeting, at which Mr. Mather will give an illustrated lecture on "Adventures in Italian Art Archives."

Women Find Plane Travel Pleasurable

Many Prominent Ones Here Fly on Business or for Recreation.

First Lady and Cabinet Wives Among City's Enthusiasts.

By Virginia Lee Warren.

When the first railway trains went thundering across the continent, women looked upon them with awe and trepidation. The men did most of the traveling. If a woman wanted to visit her relatives "out West" in Ohio or Indiana—virtually her only excuse for traveling in those days—it was considered indelicate as well as downright dangerous for her to go alone. She must be accompanied by husband, father, brother or son, so that she would have some big strong man to lean upon in event the train, while whizzing along at the reckless speed of 15 miles an hour, should run off the track and dump its passengers into a cornfield.

The same idea prevailed in the early days of the automobile. The woman who learned to drive a car was looked upon by her neighbors with mingled admiration and scorn. She was considered brave—but a bit brazen. Then came the "electric runabout." These were considered nice, ladylike contraptions and many a man encouraged his wife to drive one in the hope that she would leave his "gasoline buggy" alone.

Social and Business Trips.

Through these experiences women learned that if they wanted equal travel rights with men they would have to seize those rights as soon as new means of transportation were introduced. With the coming of the airplane they have had the chance to put this theory into practice. From the early days of commercial aviation women have flown unaccompanied from coast to coast. And now the airplane has become woman's first aid in carrying on her business and social activities.

Washington women, prominent in affairs of the Government, in society, and in club activities, now fly casually on business and social trips that may take them to New York or to the Pacific Coast; trips that may consume a few hours or several days. Leaders of women's organizations have found the airplane a means of welding together the units of their societies and of unifying and coordinating their work.

The First Lady is one of the most ardent flyers of the entire group. Since the airplane trip she made to Chicago with Mr. Roosevelt when he received the nomination for the Presidency, she has made innumerable flights in commercial transport planes, unaccompanied. Within the next month she will fly to Puerto Rico—on business. She intends to study the economic conditions on the island. By flying, she will save hours of valuable time.

Cabinet Wives Like Air.

Other prominent Washington women who think less of boarding a plane than their grandmothers did of boarding a train are Mrs. Harold L. Ickes, wife of the Secretary of the Interior; Mrs. Henry Morgenthau, jr., wife of the Secretary of the Treasury; Representative Edith Nourse Rogers, of Massachusetts; Mrs. Eugene Vidal, wife of the Aeronautics Director, United States Department of Commerce, and Mrs. Russell Magna, president of the D. A. R.

Mrs. Grace Morrison Poole, president of the General Federation of Women's Clubs, has flown a great deal in Europe but little in this country.

"I've had bad luck in this country," said energetic Mrs. Poole at Federation headquarters yesterday. "Every time I've tried to fly within the last few months, the weather conditions have been unfavorable."

Mrs. Ickes and Mrs. Morgenthau, with the exception of Mrs. Roosevelt, probably do more flying than any of the others in the group. Mrs. Ickes, who has been serving as a representative in the Illinois Legislature, has flown to Springfield whenever a session was called. When the present session is over she will board a Washington-bound plane.

Mrs. Rogers at Home Aloft.

Mrs. Morgenthau, in the summer, flies to New York several times each month to fulfill social engagements and to attend to business matters. In the winter her flights are less frequent but she prefers a plane to train or motor car if weather conditions are favorable.

Representative Rogers is the most enthusiastic flier of the group. She says she feels so at home in the air that when she returns to the ground she can scarcely realize that she has been up in the clouds. Several months ago she flew from coast to coast, inspecting veterans' hospitals. She and her pilot made uncharted flights over portions of the West, especially Montana.

"The scenery was beautiful," declared the Congress member. "I usually sleep part of the time when I am flying but on that trip there was so much to see that I kept my eyes open."

Although her plane has been forced down several times, Representative Rogers would rather fly than drive a car.

"After I had flown a great deal the street traffic annoyed me when I tried to drive," she said. "When I'm flying I feel that I have plenty of room in the sky. But now, when I drive my car, I think all the other automobiles are going to bump into me."

Mrs. Magna, as president of the D. A. R., visits all of the 48 State chapters by plane. She left a few days ago for Mississippi to attend a D. A. R. State conference. From there she will go to Louisiana. Before she returns to Washington headquarters she will visit fifteen States.

Mrs. Vidal goes dashing about in an airplane purely for pleasure. She loves to fly and has found that air travel is ideal for keeping social engagements in New York, Palm Beach and Chicago, all within a few days. Once she started to learn to fly herself but didn't finish the course; says it is more fun just to sit back in the plane and let the pilot do the work.

All of these women air-travelers have found that it is best to fly with as small amount of luggage as possible, for their own convenience as well as to meet the regulations of the plane. Mrs. Amos L. Beaty, of the Shoreham, agrees with them. She, too, takes little luggage on her frequent flights to New York with her husband, Judge Beaty. But she does insist upon taking "Bimbo" along.

Bimbo is a blue-eyed, white Persian cat who is decidedly air-minded. If the Beatys remain on the ground for several weeks, Bimbo grows impatient. He tries to snuggle into his zipper airplane bag, plainly showing that he is pining for another trip among the clouds. When he is in the plane, he looks out the window and takes great interest in the scenery. Within the next month or so Bimbo—and the Beatys—will fly to Oklahoma, where the judge wil attend to business matters.

Mrs. Roosevelt Pleads Cause Of Booksellers

Tells NRA Meeting of Peril to Them in Chains and Large Stores.

Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt yesterday intervened in the small business protest meeting arranged by the NRA to defend retail book stores against competition of chain or large department stores.

A statement by Mrs. Roosevelt was read by Mrs. Harriet Anderson, of the Channel Book Shop of New York. The First Lady defended the small retail book stores and raised, also, the question of individual grocers in competition with chain organizations.

Her statement said that it had been brought to her attention that retail department stores can undersell small book shops without violating the retail code. She pointed out that the department store can cut book prices to the wholesale cost and charge all overhead for a book department to other departments in the store.

"It is easy to say, of course, that all small book shops will have to go out of business," Mrs. Roosevelt's statement said, "but I question the desirability of saying that, for in many cases, even in food shops, one can, on the whole, get better value for the money and the customers will pay less in all-around buying than in the chain stores. Even though we acknowledge that chain stores in cities can always do it more cheaply, I doubt if they can in smaller communities and give the same value.

"Even if this were true, it would do away with what I should say was our ultimate aim in building up community spirit and consumption at home of as much as possible of what is produced in the neighborhood."

Telegram to Roosevelt Saves Family's Home

Kenosha, Wis., Feb. 27 (U.P.). Thanks to President Roosevelt, Tony Corbelli and his family of five still have a home today.

The Government was slow in handling Corbelli's application for a Federal home loan. Filed last October, it was unfilled when a mortgage holder ordered the family to vacate last week. Corbelli wired a desperate plea to Mr. Roosevelt.

The President answered immediately, saying he had instructed the HOLC director to speed the loan.

Yesterday, Corbelli received a check for $3,040, more than enough for mortgage, interest and taxes.

Specialist Criticizes Glasses on Women

Elschnig Says They Denote American Lack of Pride.

Kansas City, Mo., Feb. 27.—American women take less pride in their appearance than Europeans. This accounts for the eyeglasses that shield countless pairs of feminine eyes in America, believes Dr. Anton Elschnig, head of the eye clinic of the University of Prague, who is conducting clinics at the general hospital here.

"You see many women wearing glasses in the United States," said the famous specialist. "That is not so in Europe. The women over there are too proud, I suppose you would say."

When European women wear glasses, it is usually because of near-sightedness, according to Dr. Elschnig. That also applies to European men. In America the most prevalent optical difficulty is farsightedness. Although there is no scientific explanation for this fact, Dr. Elschnig believes that it may be caused by Americans watching sports more than Europeans.

Where There Is Snow.

By Katherine Smith.

Where there is snow, white
As seas' first foam
There should be
No sound.
The soft falling of sleet
Is stilled.
Air has cleared.
Where there is snow—white,
And unbroken
There is no
Sound.

Steinberg's Hose Panics Spectators At NRA Hearing

By Mildred Reed Bundy.

It couldn't be that Ralph Steinberg had been playing golf on such a morning as yesterday, what with the golf courses being covered with drifts of snow. But Ralph Steinberg wore golf hose of the boldest black and white diamonded pattern with his morning suit—the morning suit all so correct, even to the wing collar, when he sat among NRA associates on the platform of the public hearing in the Commerce building. The ensemble was so interesting to spectators that the stirring effect of the important speeches came near being lost. News hounds neglected their notes on facts to be sure of the spelling of Steinberg's name and photographers did their best to capture the effect of the costume with their cameras.

• • • •

For several months Mr. Steinberg has been in the public relations section of the NRA. He is valuable in the foreign newspaper publicity interpretations.

• • • •

The eccentricity of the Steinberg ensemble was noticed as he chatted with Mrs. Mary H. Rumsey, who held her own important place on the platform. Mrs. Rumsey's costume, a dark brown knitted tailleur was irreproachable. Those close to her noticed a bit of abandon in her brown and white silk scarf. Its pattern was made of an all-over printing in small letters of 'Repeal the Eighteenth Amendment.'

• • • •

Also in tailored brown and white was Miss Frances Robinson, assistant to Gen. Johnson. Severity in diminutive Miss Robinson's costume was prevented by a round white collar.

• • • •

Mrs. Emily Newell Blair, the only other woman noted on the platform, in addition to Mrs. Rumsey and Miss Robinson, wore a knitted green tailored gown. Mrs. Blair is a member of the Consumers' Advisory Board.

• • • •

This sign, sticking up from drifts of 3 or 4 feet of snow about the Commerce Building, was one which the stream of persons coming and going from the NRA hearing had no apparent impulse to defy:

"Newly seeded lawn. Keep off."

Would Thwart Pirates.

Probably the most beauteous of all those appearing to speak at the NRA hearing is Miss Mary Bendelari, who has the welfare of American designers at heart. Miss Bendelari has spent months in Washington struggling to get the NRA to do something effective against piracy in design, not only of designs of feminine fashions, but of things as prosaic as kitchen sinks.

Pretty Miss Bendelari, in chic blouse and hat of periwinkle blue, worn with rich black suit and silky fox scarf, was a refreshing note among the almost solid array of business men.

• • • •

Miss Bendelari believes that if piracy from American designers can be stopped, a quarter million girls and men who are potential designers will find profitable work. She, herself, originator of shoes for American women, had no protection for her designs and lost heavily from piracy after spending ten years in perfecting the shoes in Paris. With all her success abroad and recognition internationally in business, Miss Bendelari is glad to talk about her home and family in Joplin, Mo.

• • • •

Shirt-Makers' Friend.

Earnest, gray-eyed Mrs. Dorthy Bellanca, of New York, has brought a plea to the NRA to stop the competition of prison labor with the women's shirt making industry of the country. Mrs. Bellanca is a representative of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers of America. Herself a shirt worker at small wages at 14, Mrs. Bellanca, now in her thirties, knows the problems of the girls in Pennsylvania, New Jersey and other States who must sew shirts to live. She has seen emaciation and drawn faces disappear with the coming of a minimum wage of $13 a week for such girls. Before the New Deal wages for such workers was 65 cents to $8 a week, many more drawing the former sum than the latter. "Cornelia Pinchot is the heroine of the girl shirt workers," Mrs. Bellanca said. "Mrs. Pinchot more than anyone else has contributed to the betterment of life for these workers."

Movies to Instruct 'New Era' Students

Teachers Will Be Freed to Help Individuals.

Cleveland, Feb. 27 (U.P.).—The "new era" in education will find motion pictures being used to implant facts into the minds of youngsters, leaving teachers free to give individual attention to small groups, it was predicted today at the Department of Superintendence convention.

Educators have come to view the movies as a great educational power and research men are telling them how to harness this power and bring it into the schoolroom, according to Dr. V. C. Anspiger.

"One teacher, with a sound motion picture apparatus, could teach a class of 1,000 pupils," Anspiger said. "This would not mean that movies would replace teachers. But by instructing large classes with the aid of pictures, the teachers would be released for small group meetings where social problems, the youngsters' own personal questions and so forth could be discussed."

Dr. W. W. Charters, director of research at Ohio State University, explained that although an 8-year-old boy at the movies will see only three-fifths as much as his father, he will remember what he sees much longer.

Puritan Touch on Young Modern

A dashing young modern achieves the demureness of a Puritan maid by using a wide, cape-like collar and balloon cuffs of cut-out linen on a jacket frock of navy blue sheer crepe. Navy and white is running that other famous pair, black and white, a close second this spring.

Esperantists Rapidly Gain Ground Here

Universal Language Aided by Slump That Gives Time for Study.

Hundreds in Washington Speak It; May Become School Course.

Esperanto is both a lilting word and a great fascinator. And many Washington women have succumbed to its charm. A new game? A perfume? No!

A language. When it was first announced 35 years ago that a new, universal language had been invented people laughed hilariously. But today Esperanto has come into its own. The world-wide economic crisis has made folks realize the need for understanding and unity between the inhabitants of different nations. Increased leisure gives opportunity for study, and Esperanto provides a means for broader knowledge and opens the doors to new worlds.

Consequently, hundreds of Washington professional and business people and many high school and university students are studying Esperanto. The majority of the students are women. Night classes are given at the community centers and the Y. M. C. A. and the language is included in the regular course of study at both American and Howard Universities.

Spreads Over World.

In countries all over the world people are taking the study of Esperanto seriously. And many Washington students correspond with students in other cities and countries.

According to its sponsors, Esperanto is the simplest most expressive language known. If adopted by leading nations it will permit people of all nationalities to converse without the necessity of studying each others language, they say. It also provides a suitable means for scientists to communicate their latest findings to each other.

The use of Esperanto in international conferences makes the services of interpreters unnecessary; the work is also much more accurate.

It is estimated that, with the use of this language, work which would ordinarily require a week can be accomplished in a day. Large importers find it invaluable in trade conferences.

Invented by Russian.

Esperanto was invented about 1887 by Dr. L. Zamenhof, a Russian scholar. It is entirely phonetic, has only 16 simple rules with no exception, and the fundamentals, it is asserted, may be mastered in two hours. It is based upon words common to several European languages. Its dictionary contains 2,642 root words and in its grammar are 45 correlative pronouns, adjectives and adverbs. It derives its name from the Spanish word "esperanza," meaning hope, which represents the spirit of the new language through which a closer brotherhood of man is hoped for.

Hundreds of magazines in many countries are published in Esperanto. More than 700 books have been translated into the language.

So widespread has the interest in Esperanto become, and so great is its recognized value, a bill requiring that it be taught in the public schools will be introduced in Congress in the near future.

Flower Petals Used as Models In Spring Collar

Pique, Organdy Employed on Smart Costumes for Days Near at Hand.

Collars in the shape of flower petals will encircle the necklines of many smart spring frocks.

Pique in pastel shades and white is being used for circlets of tulip, daisy or calla lily petals. Organdy is also worked into frivolous imitations of flowers, including carnations of flowers, including carnacase of tiny blossoms, such as violets, the bits of colored organdy are piled thickly on a plain organdy background. When the simulated flowers are larger, they are tacked to a narrow band so that the outline of blossoms shows plainly against the dress beneath.

In addition to the frilly petal collars, there are many tailored types for spring. These tailored ones are usually in white and are most effective on black, navy blue or dark green frocks. There are, however, a large number of collars in a pale tea rose shade as well as citron and delphinium blue. Some are narrow, round, school-girl affairs. Some are so wide that they may be called miniature capes. Others are cut in geometric designs.

For semiformal afternoon dresses, the ruffle version of the separate collar is excellent. These gay little ruffled accessories are made of everything from point d'esprit to Valenciennes lace. The point d'esprit is invariably tinted. Collars consisting of yards and yards of lace are often in pastel shades as well as white. Mousseline de soie ruffles in white or dusty pink with wee black edges make delectable additions to dull crepe frocks.

Whenever separate collars are in vogue, gilets and plastrons are sure to come in for attention. Sprightly gilets for spring are made of glazed printed chintz, printed taffetas, challis, and pique.

Plastrons are developed in period styles, including the 1900, or Gibson Girl type, and the Henry VIII version. The former consists of ruffled organdy, which stands up at the back of the neck and then continues down the front of the blouse in double ruffles. The Henry VIII plastron also stands up in back, but with small box pleats instead of ruffles. These pleats adorn the front neckline in picturesque effect.

Then there are plain organdy scarfs, finished at the ends with ruffles. These scarfs may be arranged to suit the mood and costume of the wearer.

Mrs. Ecker to Read At Bookshop Tonight

'Portrait of Old Georgetown' Key Rendezvous Topic.

Mrs. Grace Dunlop Ecker, whose book, "A Portrait of Old Georgetown," has been favorably received by critics, will read from her book and tell some of her personal experiences in old Georgetown, at the Francis Scott Key Bookshop at Twenty-ninth and O streets tonight.

This bookshop, which is unique in Washington, is operated by two direct descendants of Francis Scott Key, Mrs. Edith Claude Foye and Miss Mary Bozman Claude.

The shop is in an old colonial home in Georgetown. Each Saturday afternoon tea is served in the large room for patrons. Here book lovers gather, sit around the inviting fire and talk books. The Francis Scott Key coat of arms with the motto, "Prudence and Courage," is inscribed above the fireplace.

Mrs. Ecker's reading is the first of a series of readings by well-known authors which will be given at the Francis Scott Key Bookshop.

What Today Means

"Pisces."

If February 28 is your birthday, the best hours for you on this date are from 8 to 9 a. m., from 2 to 3 p. m. and from 7:30 to 8:30 p. m. The danger periods are from 10:30 to 11:30 a. m., from 4 to 5 p. m. and from 6 to 7 p. m.

If you were born on February 28, cultivate the habit of being optimistic and cheerful. It is just as easy to learn to carry a smile on your face as it is to wear a "hang dog," dismal expression. Try not to let your features reflect anything but pleasant thoughts. If you dwell on unpleasant, irritating, or worrying happenings and keep mulling them over and over, especially if it is a fancied wrong, they manifest themselves on your visage. Learn to replace unhappy or bitter thoughts with joyous or elevating ones, and you will be surprised to see how much happier you will be, and how much brighter the world appears.

The woman born on February 28 must have confidence in her own ability, and not underrate her capability to succeed in whatever she undertakes. Overcome any sense of timidity you may feel by resolutely knowing that you are naturally courageous, and that there is no real reason for you to fear anything. You have every qualification needed to face life successfully, so let nothing discourage or daunt you. Remember: "He conquers who conquers himself."

The man born on February 28 can develop a great amount of self-assurance, if he will only realize how essential this is to his success in business. He will be wise to avoid indulging in any morbid thoughts. His ability to impress his personality on others will prove most helpful. Geniality is a characteristic worthy of practicing in your daily intercourse with everyone.

People born on February 28 are very versatile. Instinctively religiously inclined they should take an active interest in church work, as this will give them much happiness.

Successful people born on February 28:

John Tyler, jurist and statesman.
Mary Lyon, educator.
Ezekiel F. Chambers, jurist.
Cornelius V. Lawrence, merchant.
Augustus A. Hayes, chemist.

Face Cleansing Oil Is First Aid To Complexions

Overcomes Need of Allowing Layers of Make-up to Gather During Day.

By Ruth Anne Davis.

A quick clean-up! Nothing easier, and nothing more necessary in this day of rushing here and there, meeting appointments and making others. Art has adapted itself to the rapid impressionism of the times, music has become more realistic; certainly we must change our happy go lucky ways of make-up to more modern methods.

Instead of piling one layer of powder upon another from morning till night, instead of rouging and rerouging, one can with a bottle of cleansing oil do a quick clean-up in a few seconds. Dust, dirt and make-up vanishes instantly and leaves the skin smooth and refreshed. Now powder and rouge and the whole tone of the complexion is younger, fresher looking by far than it would have been if one had merely smeared on more cosmetics.

Going all day without cleansing the face, by letting heavy layers of powder and rouge accumulate, means stopping up the pores of the skin and allowing them no freedom for breathing. It also clogs them up with matter that enlarges the pores and make blackheads.

By using cleansing oil, one manages to retain the invigorated look of the morning. Even at the end of a hard, busy day, she can by careful cleansing and renewing make-up give an entirely different expression to the face, supplant the fatigued droop with new vivaciousness. Once one has changed her appearance from one of utter weariness she has progressed in changing her feelings.

It is extremely convenient, not only for keeping in the desk drawer for use from 9 until 6, but a real boon to have at home. Late in the evening, when one drags her leaden feet home and has but one thought and that for sleep and the bed, it is convenient to have this quick clean-up oil on hand. In half a second, one can wipe off make-up and hop into bed with an easy conscience that she isn't taking too great liberties with her complexion.

Bargains in Handbags.

An assortment of handbags varied enough to please the most picayunish shopper is most conservatively priced. Although we knew the shop to be reliable, and its handbags always general favorites, we felt sure such lovely bags at such moderate prices must be a mistake. But they were specially ordered for this occasion.

Bright, shiny patent leathers, calf skins of new and unusual shapes and designs, are luring handbag hunters by the dozens.

New and Tricky Gloves.

Although it's the time of the year when many are mitten conscious, we can't pass up a tricky pair of gloves, even though they are the iciest, chilliest, sheerest looking silk imaginable.

And that's what these are. Dainty, fragile little things there on the counter, flimsy bits of silk mesh. But somehow unlike a majority of lacy gloves these are cut to fit, and fit they do. Tightly over the palm, neatly around the fingers, just barely over the wrist where they flare slightly.

Not for evening, certainly? The girl behind the counter shook her head. Not for sport assuredly? She laughed. For street. Not really! It was hard to believe. They looked so delicate and formal, but no, we were given to understand they were extremely durable, proof against all kinds of hard wear, and apt to be summer favorites because they were so cool. And already showing signs of being spring favorites for no good reason at all.

When and How of Wine.

The "how to serve wine" trays teach a few new things—and that is amazing to all readers of newspapers and magazines. Certainly, think they, the subject has been covered from top to bottom, and then some. Certainly the proper wine for each course, all the whys and wherefores have been drummed into their heads till they're tired of it. That with a despairing scream.

But though they read this with wary eye and doubting mind, 'tis true nevertheless this tray does throw new light on the subject. It not only tells which wines when, but insinuates a bit of the wine history. The tray is covered with a beautifully drawn map of Europe and this map shows the countries and the typical wines. A new idea and well worth attending to.

Refillable Talcums.

There are refillable lipsticks, refillable compacts and now refillable talcums. And they're the queerest and at the same time the most attractive little novelties which have appeared lately.

These talcums are made of stalward metal, in spherical shapes. They come with several different perfumed powders, in red, green, orchid, beige, blue and black. When all the powder is gone, just bring back the box and have it filled up again.

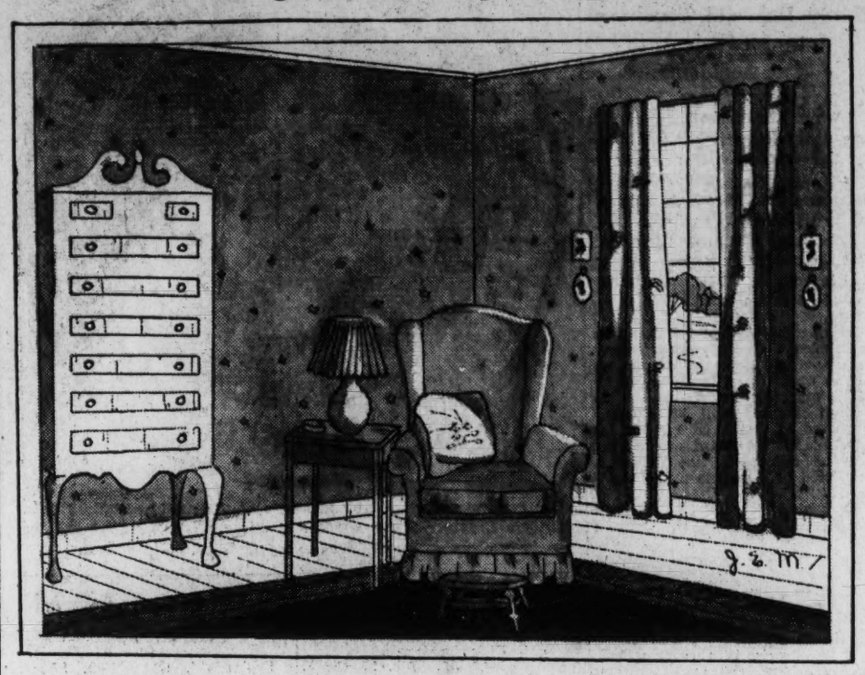
Early American Motif Readily Lends Itself To Furnishing 2-Room Apartment Attractively



Miss Maxson Tells How Best Results May Be Obtained Quickly.

By Jo Ellen Maxson.

The interest of the First Lady of the Land in the beauty of early American furniture has again turned attention to the chintzes, ladder-back chairs, pewter tankards, patchwork quilts and charming details that made the houses of our forefathers homes.

Early American furniture is well suited to modern living. Good copies can be purchased inexpensively and many of the pieces can serve two purposes. This avoids the cluttered appearance that too much furniture gives to a room.

A problem often confronted in Washington is the furnishing of a small two-room apartment consisting of living room bedroom and kitchenette. The necessary pieces of furniture should be:

For the living room, a maple gateleg table which could be used for dining or reading, a medium-sized high-boy also of maple to hold household linens and blankets, a maple hearth bench or "settle," as they are sometimes called, with a high back, winged sides and cushioned in chintz; two maple slat-back chairs with rush seats, and one comfortable wing-backed grandfather's chair, slip covered in chintz, with a small maple foot stool.

In the bedroom, twin spool beds of maple would be in keeping with the rest of the apartment. An interesting dressing-table is easily made with a quilted calico skirt bound in a contrasting color with a maple framed mirror hung above. A chest of drawers and a small night table, both of maple with simple turnings, would complete the furniture that is actually needed to live comfortably.

An interesting color scheme in red, white and blue could be worked out, with the living-room hung in wall paper with a white ground and a scattering of silver stars, the chintz or homespun for the draperies and upholstering with red and old blue predominating, and the lamps with pewter bases and shades of white parchment starred in red and corded in red or white. The same colors would be carried through the bedroom, as the apartment is too small to be broken into a variety of color schemes.

Miss Maxson will be glad to give individual help in home decorating problems. Write her in care of The Washington Post.

How to Keep Well

By Dr. W. A. Evans.

Treatment for Chilblains.

A. F. writes as follows:

Several years ago I froze my toes and every winter since then I have trouble with my feet. Is there any new and improved treatment for this?

The answer is yes.

There is no statement as to the nature of the trouble, but chilblains is almost a certain guess. This means that, when exposed to cold, the toes and perhaps the entire foot become blue, mottled, and cold. There may be considerable itching. If the case is a rather bad one there may be blisters. As a result of the freezing the tissues have become sensitized to cold and exposure starts up the unpleasant but not dangerous condition known generally as chilblains.

There are two comparatively new procedures, both of which are effective.

The first is paraffin foot baths. The foot and lower leg are kept for 20 minutes daily in melted paraffin held at a temperature of 125 degrees Fahrenheit. The directions call for sterlized wax which melts at 120 degrees. If the baths are to be used in cases in which the skin is not broken, and since bacteria can not live long in a temperature of 120, one need not deny himself the paraffin treatment because he is uncertain that the wax is sterile. It is important, however, to know the melting point of the paraffin and to be certain of the temperature of the melted product. The equipment includes a container large enough to hold the foot and lower leg and capable of being kept at the right temperature. It also includes a thermometer. The paraffin is put in the container and melted. When it is at a temperature above 120 and lower than 130 the affected foot and leg are immersed in it and kept there for 20 minutes. At the end of this period the parts are removed from the wax and 3 minutes later this substance is peeled off. These treatments are given once a day for about two weeks.

The ultraviolet light treatment is used especially in those cases in which blisters are present, although it is also of service in the other cases. However, if the case has no blisters the paraffin method is the better. The ultraviolet light treatment is given as follows: The light is held about 6 inches from the skin. The exposure is continued until a mild erythema develops. Experience is needed to judge just how much to redden the skin. The treatments are given twice a week for about three weeks. There must be caution not to give a succeeding treatment until the redness caused by the former one has faded out. It is probable that exposure to ordinary electric light would be of some service in a case of mild chilblains, but the proper use of an ultraviolet light will be required if the case is a well-marked one.

No Poison Danger.

H. G. writes: Is it possible for a firm tumor or cyst, located just below the hip, of 15 years' standing, and not painful enough to cause trouble with the sciatic nerve, to throw off any poison in the system?

REPLY.

No.

Sub-Debs' Spring Garb Plays Two Roles

Girl May Quickly Change Personality by Donning Another Dress.

Directed By Amos Parrish.

New York, Feb. 27.—A girl can be two girls these coming spring days. One a bit boyish. The other her real self, full of feminine frills and thrills. And she changes her personality quick as a wink by changing her dress.

Crisp little tailored dresses hanging side by side in the closet with frocks all flounced and draped and caped . . . that's the combination smart young sub-debs want this season.

Jacket Frocks.

And among the tailored dresses she'll want a jacket frock or two . . . all crisp in line, simple in detail, with an almost boyish elimination of extras. One with a loose box jacket, or a fitted jacket, or a bolero jacket in the new peppy Mexican style.

The dress sketched is one good example of the jacket fashion, though its ruffled collar gives it a more girlish air than many others have.

Also in the tailored boyish row should hang a two-piece dress. Or at any rate, one which looks two-piece even if the two pieces are really sewed together.

Nobody looks as well as the sub-deb in them. Their fitted revealing lines are just built for her young slim figure.

Tailored white pique collars and cuffs keep them looking their crispest, while bow trimmings or jabots can be chosen if she wants them just a little less severe.

For a right-about-face, sub-deb sister can have all the frills and flounces her heart desires. Frills and fine pleatings on collars, necklines and sleeves. Flounces put on bodices to make them look like a bolero treatment.

Lingerie Touches.

All sorts of lingerie collars, cuffs and jabots lend their softening whiteness to her more feminine one-piece dresses. And softly draped necklines, especially those new monastic cowls, replace the flat primish necklines of her tailored frocks.

Cape collars are a favorite youthful detail, too. Shirring and smocking . . . just as she used to wear in her little girl days . . . are now very smart grown-up trimmings for her.

Whatever type her new spring dress may be, the neckline of it is almost sure to be high about the throat. The younger girl was the first to adopt these higher necklines wholeheartedly, and she'll be the last to give them up . . . because they are necklines very, very becoming to young faces.

(Copyright, 1934.)

Frocks of the types described are available in Washington in all the better shops and department stores.

Beef Good Food For Children If Cooked Simply Contains Proteins, Minerals and Vitamins Needed; Some Tasty Forms.

Beef is an excellent food for children because it furnishes valuable proteins, minerals and vitamins which they need. It may be fed to even the very young child in the form of scraped beef or broth. As soon as he is able to chew, he may have meat in other forms.

Meat for young children should be prepared simply, and all of the rich gravies and sauces should be omitted. Really the only gravy included in the very young child's diet should be the meat juice itself, and this without a large quantity of fat.

Broiled steaks and chops and roasts, served with their own juices, are especially well suited to the child's meal. Stews, too, are good because of the combination of vegetables which are more acceptable because of the meat flavor.

Liver, either beef or calf, has a very definite place in the child's diet because of its high protein, iron and vitamin content. Recipes suitable for the child's meal are suggested by Inez S. Willson, home economist.

Liver and Spinach Mold.

1 pound liver
½ cup bread crumbs or cooked rice
2 tablespoons butter
½ cup cream
2 cups cooked spinach
2 hard-cooked eggs
1 egg, beaten
Salt and pepper.

Parboil liver 5 minutes. Chop finely and mix with bread crumbs. Add beaten egg, cream and seasoning. Place in a buttered mold, cover with a layer of cooked spinach which has been put through a colander and garnish with slices of hard-cooked eggs. Place in a pan of hot water and bake in a slow oven (325 degrees F). When firm, unmold on a platter and serve with tomato sauce.

Beef Birds.

2 pounds round steak
4 or 5 medium-sized carrots
1 tablespoon butter
Flour
Salt
Pepper

Have the round steak cut about ½ inch thick and sprinkle with salt and pepper. Cut it into as nearly as possible rectangular pieces 2½ by 4 inches in size. Partially cook the carrots in boiling salted water. Wrap a piece of round steak around each one and fasten with skewers. Dredge with flour and brown slightly in butter. Then add a small amount of water, cover and let cook slowly until the meat is very tender.

Susan Mills Describes Possibilities of Salad as Most Appetizing and Attractive Course of Dinner and Tells How Better Ones Are Made.

By Susan Mills.

The salad can be, and often is, the most appetizing and attractive course of a dinner. In the preparation of her salad, the hostess can use all of her ingenuity and artistic taste.

A dash of this, a drop or two of this, and she has a new creation. Or, if she wants to follow old recipes tried and tested by time, her success is assured.

The best-known French salad is the green salad. It is simply a bowl of greens, lettuce, endive, chickory, watercress, and others and a French dressing. Mrs. Carbury, of Normandy Farms, adds raw carrots and green pepper, cut fancifully and the whole is a thing of real artistic beauty. A French dressing of oil, vinegar, salt and pepper, is one of the most useful.

With a heavy dinner, a vegetable salad is the best sort to serve, the size selected according to the size of the dinner.

In making a salad, first of all be sure all the ingredients are fresh, all dried or bruised parts removed, and that materials are scrupulously clean. The salad should be served cold, the crisp things crisp—no other way.

One delicious combination of flavors is cold boiled Brussels sprouts, cut in halves, and marinated in French dressing, garnished with anchovies, stoned olives, sweet pickles and capers.

Cold cooked cauliflower, sprinkled over with grated cheese, then a layer of mayonnaise, and laid on a bed of watercress, is something different.

Chestnuts lend themselves attractively to salad making. Cover cold boiled chestnuts, cut in pieces, with grated orange peel, garnish with mayonnaise, and serve on bed of lettuce.

Here is a salad to be served appropriately with roast duck: Two bunches of watercrest, crisp and dry, and a cup of sour apples cut in thin slices. Serve with French dressing.

Beets are useful in salad making because of their color. What looks pretty is always appetizing.

Beet Salad Farci.

Boil and peel six large beets. Cut off tops and scoop out center, pickle or soak in vinegar and water for two hours. Drain and fill with mixture of chopped cucumbers, a bunch of celery, a tomato, sprigs of parsley, ½ cup of the beets, ¼ teaspoon salt and a dash cayenne. Serve with French dressing.

For a luncheon, when you plan to serve the salad as the main course, try a Manhattan Salad.

Mix a cup each of chopped chicken, celery, apple, marinate an hour in lemon juice, oil, salt and pepper. Mix with mayonnaise. Serve on lettuce and garnish with two hard-boiled eggs, chopped, or put through a potato ricer, walnut meats and sections of orange or grapefruit.

With the salad course melba toast is a popular accessory, or toasted bread sticks, or cheese straws. If desired, Burgundy or champagne may be served.

Beggars All

By Katharine Newlin Burt

The Story Thus Far.

Rafe Courvoisier, last member of an impoverished Southern family, is released from a secret outlaw rendezvous by Madrone, its ruler, when he promises to obey Madrone's instructions, to be written to him in a unique green ink. Returning to Candle Island, his family home in Chetteraw, he finds that it has been bought by Hortense Kendall, a beautiful girl from the North. He takes service as Miss Kendall's boatman. His family lawyer gives him a letter from Harmon Jay, Miss Kendall's guardian. It is written in Madrone's green ink, and instructs him to live at Candle Island. Entering his boatman's house for the first time, Rafe hears a stealthy step.

"Yes," Rondo applauded, "you are correct. We do run in here north of the swamp. There is a beach nearer to us than the other landing place. Very good. Very nice, indeed. I shall leave you here, then. You see the house? Under the persimmon tree. The other, I am told, is called a heaven tree. Ah, you are quick to observe, to see. A sailor, evidently. You will find this place very clean but bare. Is this all your luggage?

Rafe took up his suit case and stepped down on the sand. "Yes, I'll tote it. Toni needn't bother."

Toni was not bothering. He and Rondo broke into Italian speech as the boat began its kicking behind Rafe's back. Rondo spoke violently, Toni with sullenness. It was as if they were rehearsing parts for some drama, so unrelated were their poses, their tones and gestures, to the surely unimportant business of conveying a new boatman to his quarters.

Rafe, his red head lifted like a setter's, put down his bag on the sharp, thin beach beyond the sand and watched them dwindle as the boat leaped down the shore. But unable to identify or even name his quarry, he relinquished this useless gesture of curiosity, took up his bag and went down a vague sandy trail to the door of his prospective and very lonely dwelling place.

A Long Way From Anywhere.

He was a long way from anywhere down here. He couldn't so much as see "the mansion," not even any of the outbuildings. The swamp lay, green and miasmic, between. Not a very convenient place to keep one's boatman. A telephone? No. No wiring anywhere.

Queer crew, the lot of them! From their young mistress down. She'd be expecting him to report and to take his orders. It would surely have been more sensible for Rondo to carry him on up to the big house first. Perhaps they'd send him down that motorboat he was to keep here. If not, he'd foot it. Meanwhile he'd go in and unpack.

The cabin, made of whitewashed logs, was one-storied and two-roomed. A chimney ran up its middle, furnishing an open fireplace to each room. The doors and window frames had once been painted blue.

The rooms were clean and bare, but cherful yellow curtains had been strung up in the small windows and there were painted tables (one provided with materials for writing) and chairs. In the other room, a cot bed cleanly dressed, a washstand decently appointed, a chest of drawers, a mirror, candles and oil lamps. Bright rag rugs were scattered about on the old floors. There hung a new tin kettle from the crane of the larger fireplace.

The back door opened almost directly on the water—a deep and narrow channel, arched over by dense bushes that led out to the sea and held a big old scow of a rowboat with old-fashioned iron oarlocks. The heavy oars stood on end in one corner of the cabin.

It was extraordinarily still. His own steps moving about were startling. The sudden loud free shouting of a mocker in the heaven tree had the outrage of a boy's bravado in a haunted or a holy place.

Rafe went into the bedroom whistling softly and began to unpack. He put away in the wardrobe the clothes Tine had given him and the revolver he stowed in a small drawer in the night stand by his bed. He found it impossible to keep up his whistling now that the mocking-bird was silent. Instead he listened, walked as quietly as he could, to listen . . . as though for the sound of stealthy oars or of a footstep in the sand.

That was the effect of silence, a man heard footsteps. No, by Heaven! It was a real step. He went over at a stride to his nearest window and lifted the edge of his curtain to see without being seen.

Chapter IX.

Miss Kendall herself was coming along the strip of sand that fringed the swamp.

She was bareheaded, her hair curled in the damp mist. She wore a sleeveless yellow dress and carried a sheet of paper in her hand. As she came in front of the house under the heaven tree, she stopped, looked about her, and began to study the paper in her hand. She had now a straight, angry line between her brows. She was reading over a letter which caused her annoyance or dismay.

Rafe dropped his curtain and went out. At the sudden sight of him, she leaped back.

"Mr. Courvoisier! You gave me a fright. I had no idea you'd be here so soon without consulting me."

Her curious tawny face between its dark points of hair was pale and her eyes had an incandescent look. The lady of Candle Island was angry as though at some trespassing impertinence. He was hardly less surprised, less angered than she seemed to be.

"But Miss Kendall, your man Rondo had your instructions. He's just left me here with my suitcase to get settled. He told me distinctly that was what you had arranged."

Girl Entrances Him.

They had drawn closer by a few steps. Her warm vitality smote him almost like the sudden sun. It seemed to lay its hands upon him.

"I don't understand. I simply don't understand," She spoke with deliberation, like all of her deliberateness curious in so young a girl. "Mr. Jay has written to suggest that I offer you the occupancy of this house until you have arranged your life in Chetteraw. Meanwhile, you see, I had decided to use it for a boatman."

"A boatman?" He laughed. "I reckon I understand. You didn't know that"—he laughed again, feeling himself flush—"that the boatman is—well, me."

She drew back as though to see him better, to recognize him as a boatman and to measure a sudden sense of readjustment in their relationship.

"Oh!" Her voice and her face were blank. "But—I see. How queer!"

Then she just stood and stared as rudely as an untrained country child.

And under her stare and the readjustment of their mental attitudes he felt a servant, anxious, uncertain, humbled. He hated himself for his own quick, unreasoning subservience and he hated her afresh with a surprising, unexpected violence that made his heart beat hard and forced him even to lower his eyes.

She spoke again. "Well, it's all perfectly absurd, anyway, but there's no reason at all why you shouldn't have this silly job if you want it." Her color was higher, more apparent. "Certainly it clears up the question about the house doesn't it? Did you—had you heard anything of Mr. Jay's proposal. I'm still confused."

"I am not here by his invitation, but by your arrangement for your boatman, Miss Kendall."

She Speaks Casually.

"Don't you like the house?" She spoke casually, beginning to be at her ease again, and went past him through the door to stand inside and look about.

"It does seem to me a little out of the way," he suggested, "if you want me to be within easy call."

"The reason I put the boatman here," she told him, standing now at the door that was open to the channel of dark hooded water, "is that I've had a notion . . . I've thought that someone was coming in here from out yonder."

He walked quickly over to her and looked out. "Coming in here, from the water? But who would do that? A fisherman using it for a camp, perhaps? It could hardly be anyone else. Miss Kendall. Tramps don't drift about in boats."

She had turned back from the window at once. "I imagine not. But I didn't like it. So I thought it might not be a bad idea to discourage trespassers by putting one of my own people down here."

He smiled down at her. He was glad that Jenkyns had been right. She was of no great stature, shorter than he was by a head.

"I shall not be afraid. I'd like some mosquito bar, though, please. That swamp has its dangers. Have you ever spent a summer here, ma'am?"

"No. But this year I shall spend one. Of course it will be hot, but we—er—I can be on the water or in it."

"Those of us in Chetteraw who can afford it go away in June. You'll find it not only very hot, but very lonely."

She shrugged. Her young, full, close-shut mouth was bitter. "I've been so lonely here in winter that I can't possibly find the summer any lonelier."

She went out with a sudden resolute air. "But that does not trouble me," she said, talking back to him over her shoulder and with a new business-like briskness. "I will send you down your uniforms, Mr. Courvoisier. Then will you please put one on and come back with the boy to my house? I will show you where you are to get your meals and this afternoon I want you to take me out in a canoe. I want to learn everything about boats: to paddle, to row, to sail, and . . . oh, yes, to swim. You must teach me to swim."

He let himself glance up and down her once and he knew that it was a look of veiled and studied insult.

She stood still and dismissed him.

He went back quickly to his shelter, his skin afire. He must, he bade himself, mind his boatman's manners. She must be an ignorant or a reckless fool to trust him so.

A sudden memory of that other and more fearful servitude tamed him, his lean body slackened, his springy tiger's step grew dogged and slow, his head sank.

He looked back, right and left, over his shoulder. Hortense had disappeared. She'd been walking fast. He controlled a wish to call her back. Suddenly he was grateful for her protection, for the isolation of her island, for the strong hand of her independent wealth.

Days and nights now bloomed and faded, mingling their lights in perfumed lengths of Candle Island, while the red-haired young man at its north end and the black-haired young woman at its south kept to their separate roles of boatman and employer.

Boatman to a Lady.

And a man would not imagine, Rafe told himself, that to be the boatman of a lady was a duty to drive the heart and head into such contrary, disturbing emotions. She took his teaching simply, with dignity, and she learned with ease and grace. They were together thus strangely and alone, or with Maddalena, a broad-bodied Italian woman who had been Hortense's nurse, for the longest golden and silver hours that had ever woven themselves into the fiery pattern of his life. Hours that, but for a gnawing inner ferment, would have rested him; but for his haunted nights of solitude, would have reassured him.

He was waiting consciously for Madrone's first instructions and unconsciously he was waiting for this girl to give him some excuse for an outbreak of the bitter and unreasonable rage that had possessed his blood. He wondered as a nervous child wonders, "What will happen next?"

A storm happened.

It had been a heavy day. Hortense had sent word down to the boathouse, where he waited that she would not go out until the sun was less hot * * * when there would be a breeze, which sprang up usually about 5 or 6 o'clock. He went for a swim alone, came back and dressed. The air was still heavy. There was a wall of coppery mist along the horizon.

She came in at 5 o'clock and called to him. "We can't sail, of course, but I'll go out in one of the motor boats."

"You are beginning to feel this heat already, Miss Kendall."

"No. It's not the heat. I've had an annoying letter from my guardian. Shall we go?"

They started round the end of the island and without warning were struck by a great wind. The rain ran, white, with the wind.

Rafe put back instantly and was glad to run safely into the shelter of the boathouse. There, having climbed up to its floor, they stood under a downfall, a crashing and a thundering on the roof.

"Are you frightened?" he asked her, shouting with all his voice.

"Yes," she said, and came close to him so that her body touched his side. It seemed an instinctive motion, that of a frightened child, but it was enough. As instinctively his arms caught at her. He held her masterfully tight, bent down his head and with fierce lips sought for hers.

"You crazy little fool!" he said, furious.

But the storm-sound drowned his speech. She never heard it. He felt her turn softly in his arms, her cool and thrilling lips of a girl met his and her two sleek arms were laid about his neck.

He could just hear her speech.

"I love you, Rafe. Rafe, dear, dear . . . . I do love you so."

He drew down her hands from his neck and put her back and away from him. He fled, absolutely without a word.

France Plans Vast Military Reorganization

Unified Land, Air, Sea Forces to Be Built on Foreign Loan.

Paris, Feb. 27 (AP).—An air, sea and land force reorganization plan to strengthen France in troubled Europe will be presented at a special cabinet session.

Premier Gaston Doumergue tentatively has approved the program. It would be part of a vast military and economic rehabilitation scheme.

The huge sum necessary to finance the plan would be raised through a loan, possibly partly in England.

A strong professional "shock troops" army, the idea of Marshal Henri Petain, minister of war, is said to have been approved.

The project also is understool to contemplate modernizing of military equipment and accumulating of ammunition stocks.

The navy would speed authorized construction of ships, and strategic roads would be built.

The whole program is envisioned as aiding the economic situation while strengthing the country in the face of Chancellor Hitler's German rearmament demands and general unrest.

Frances's three-year aviation program is a vital part of the plan, as French aviation experts consider that the country has only 50 thoroughly modern craft.

Under this program, France is to spend 1,000,000,000 francs (approximately $65,000,000), annually.

Gen. Victor Denain, air minister, has said he favored the fastest pursuit planes that could be built and new type, speedy, long-range bombers.

Panama Legation Here Cleared of Lottery Hint

New York, Feb. 27 (AP).—Alderman Elias H. Jacobs today said he was mistaken in announcing he had received a telegram from the secretary of the Panama Legation in Washington proposing a municipal lottery to aid New York City's finances.

Jacobs' announcement was made last week and it drew an immediate denial from R. J. Alfaro, minister from Panama, that any legation attache had made such an overture. Jacobs said he had received a cable from a director of the Panama International Sweepstakes.

Chautemps Kin Ousted In French Fraud Quiz

Paris, Feb. 27 (AP).—Georges Pressard, brother-in-law of former Premier Camille Chautemps, today was suspended from the office of chief prosecutor of Paris by the French cabinet, pressing an investigation of the Stavisky scandal.

The cabinet instructed Henry Cheron, minister of justice, to examine charges repeatedly made in the Chamber of Deputies that Pressard was responsible for numerous postponements in the trial of Alex Stavisky on charges growing from Stavisky's financial manipulations.

Pocket on Fire Halts Hot Attack—It's Cigar

A rousing attack on J. P. Morgan by Charles P. Bloome was halted for a moment yesterday when Bloome put a lighted cigar in his pocket.

"Excuse me, Mr. Administrator," he said, "my pocket is on fire."

Bloome, rotund and oratorical, was declaiming at the NRA hearing devoted to complaints of the small business man, when the interruption occurred. A Philadelphian, he said, he represented several fraternal organizations and 200,000 depositors of closed banks.

After the fire had been brought under control, he resumed his address. "I'm cleverer than Morgan," he declared. "During the years when he couldn't pay an income tax, I did."

Drivers Form Safety League

5,000 Bus and Truckmen Join Movement to Cut Accidents.

With an initial enrollment of 5,000 bus and truck drivers, final plans for the organization of a Safe Driver's League in Washington were completed yesterday by Traffic Director William A. Van Duzer.

The league was formed in an effort to reduce hazardous driving and to promote safety and courtesy in the operation of commercial vehicles.

Membership is free but members must pledge themselves to observe motor-vehicle laws and regulations in the District and to set an example to other drivers.

Each member will be given a pledge card and a sticker for his windshield. The card and sticker will be revoked if the driver is convicted of a serious traffic violation.

The windshield sticker is black and white, bearing the slogan: "Safe, careful and courteous driving." Van Duzer urged that all commercial vehicle owners and drivers join the league. Membership applications are being received by H. L. Leonard, 451 Pennsylvania avenue northwest.

If the league is a success, Van Duzer said, other divisions will be added, to include taxicabs and private cars.

3,640 Speed District Snow Removal Task

Army Will Be Increased Today; $10,700 Paid to Shovelers.

Trolley Schedules Are Resumed and Traffic Hazards Ended.

An army of snow removers, mobilized on a few hours' notice, gave Washington a $10,000 shave yesterday and prepared to lead another assault against the drifts today with still greater numbers.

According to figures of the local CWA offices and city refuse division, 3,640 men were sent out with shovels and brooms to make the Capital safe for pedestrian and vehicular traffic. Of the total, 2,640 were Civil Works employes and the remainder were white wings from the refuse division and workmen drafted from the Highway, Water and Sewer Departments.

The emergency force would have been larger but for the fact work was able to proceed on more CWA projects than expected. Administrator Harry L. Hopkins, in granting the use of Civil Works employes for snow clearance Monday, provided they could be transferred only if they were shut out of their regular jobs by weather conditions.

Then, too, said Capt. Howard F. Clark, head of the District's CWA work assignment committee, many refused to shovel snow.

Cost Is $10,700.

The CWA men get 45 cents an hour for a six-hour day. District workers are paid $3.08 for an eight-hour day. Therefore the labor bill alone for yesterday was about $10,700. Altogether, about 300 trucks, loaders, plows and hoists were pressed into service. That cost extra.

Today the campaign will resume on a larger scale, said Capt. Clark, with the Civil Works force expected to be increased to 3,200. Every District truck available was in use yesterday and proving inadequate to cope with the gigantic clearance assignment, their numbers were swelled by many hired trucks.

First consideration was given the downtown thoroughfares, in compliance with Hopkins' proviso that CWA men might be used only where snow constituted a traffic hazard. Away from the downtown congested area, work was confined to Taft and Key Bridges, Fifteenth and H streets northeast, Eighteenth street and Columbia road and a few other heavily trafficked thoroughfares and intersections.

Where crews worked without trucks, the snow was shoveled into piles to be picked up today.

Trolleys Back on Schedule.

Residents whose homes are on side streets will have to place their trust in a warm sun mostly, said an official in the city refuse division. Such streets will be gone over with snow plows and their gutters cleaned but the District does not have the funds and manpower to give them the attention being lavished on downtown sections and busy neighborhood intersections, he declared.

Street car service is almost back to normal, although trolley traffic was still handicapped yesterday by autos parked far from the crub. Two schools of opinion arose over this menace, one arguing that these machines should be ticketed for obstructing and slowing up the flow of traffic while the other held that the drivers were blameless because to park in deep piles of snow close to the curb might prevent them from getting out again.

Inspector Benjamin A. Lamb, head of the traffic bureau, said no special orders had gone out to crack down on motorists caught in these circumstances and that the police department was pursuing a lenient policy. However, he pointed out that many of the machines have been parked in one spot since Saturday and, since the snowstorm is over, they had better be moved soon.

Danube Dance To End Series Of Ballet Russe

Strauss Waltz Rhythyms to Feature Programs at National Sunday.

"Le Beau Danube" will be the concluding number on both programs to be given by the Monte Carlo Ballet Russe next Sunday at 2:30 and 8:30 in the National Theater, under the local management of the T. Arthur Smith Concert Bureau. At the matinee performance, the other ballets will be "Les Sylphides," with music by Chopin, and "Le Concurrence" ("Competition") with music by Georges Auric. The other evennig ballets will be Schumann's "Carnaval" and "La Scuola di Ballo," with music by Boccherini.

"The Beautiful Blue Danube" is being presented twice because this ballet, danced to the irresistible waltz rhythms of Johann Strauss the younger, has proved to be the most popular number in the repertoire of the company during its successful engagement in New York. The waltzes have been orchestrated by Roger Desormiere, and the choreography has been arranged by Leonide Massine, former member of the Diaghilev Ballet Russe, who dances the principal role. The costumes and scenery are patterned after the paintings of Constantin Guys.

"Les Sylphides" is a formal ballet of the traditional school, danced against a background suggesting the landscape of Corot. In marked contrast is the modern satire by Andre Derain, "Le Concurrence," which depicts the rivalry between two tailors in a provincial city for the trade of the fair customers.

Schumann's "Carnaval" will be presented with the settings and costumes designed by Leon Bakst for Diaghilev. "La Sculo di Ballo" ("School of Dancing") has been adapted by Massine from a comedy by Carlo Goldoni, and the music has been arranged by Jean Francaix from various dances by Boccherini.

The Princess Lippe Lipski Again Loses

Realty Contract Suit Is Drab Counterpart of Former Actions.

Former Mrs. Phillips Wed to Courtier of Czar Nicholas.

Princess Elaine von der Lippe Lipski, the former Mrs. Charles Lee Phillips, yesterday lost another legal battle.

Once the wife of a Westphalian nobleman said to have ben a page in the court of Czar Nicholas, the of Appeals a suit she had brought princess lost in the District Court against Sally and Helen Burch, the C. W. Simpson Co., Inc., and others to force performance of a cotract.

Princess von der Lippe Lipski broke into the limelight here several years ago when she won a $100,000 slander suit brought against her by her mother for denying, in a printed interview, that her mother actually was her paret.

Court Fights Began in 1923.

Afterward she filled the central role in several court fights, airing rather intimate family history.

What the princess lost yesterday involved little of her complex family affairs. It was simply the matter of an agreement regarding property she owned at 11 and 11½ R street northwest. She had promised, according to the suit, the defendants certain trusts on property which was sold when the princess was said not to have carried out stipulated agreements. The court upheld the sale.

The legal difficulties of Princess Elaine, which led in an indirect fashion up to the case she lost yesterday, started in 1923. That was approximately a year after she married to Prince Nicolai Vladimir von der Lippe Lipski.

Sued by Mother.

In 1923, she adopted a Russian child, Renee de Montasse, whose mother was a Frenchwoman. There were difficulties about the adoption, and little Renee was returned to France, subsequently to come back to Washington to attend a private school as a countess.

About this time the princess announced she was filing a divorce suit, charging her half-sister, Mrs. Gertrude Schroeder, with alienating the prince's affections. She claimed she had found one of her husband's vests in Mrs. Schroeder's bedroom, and backed up her contentions by suing her sister for $100,000 damages.

Before the divorce matter was settled, Princess Von der Lippe Lipski was in another suit, strictly a family affair, with hher mother suing her for slander. Her mother, Mrs. Lillian Agnes Stover, was the widow of a small hotel keeper named Betts, who operated a hostelry near the South Ferry, Philadelphia.

Former Husband Produced.

Mrs. Stover accused the princess, whom she said was her daughter, of denying that she was actually her parent.

This, she said, slandered her, and she asked $100,000 damages, presenting a chambermaid, a nurse and a waitress, who testified that the princess was Mrs. Stover's second daughter by Betts. The princess, according to a birth certificate presented in court, was born Sarah Ellen Betts. The suit was lost by Mrs. Stover, however, when the court ruled it was no slander, nor even libel, to deny one's mother.

About that time, Princess von der Lippe Lipski won her divorce, and the prince faded out of the picture, Europeward, but not before he produced the princess' first husband, Charles Lee Phillips. The princess, the prince declared, had tricked him by telling him her first husband was dead.

Won and Lost $100,000 Suit.

Meantime, the princess won the $100,000 suit she brought against her half-sister, and lost it on an appeal. The matter was finally was settled out of court. Then her sister returned the compliment. She attempted to file suit against the United States Treasury to prevent certain payments to the princess out of Mrs. Stover's estate. The attempt failed.

This was the last appearance of the princess in court until filing of the suit which was lost yesterday. Following settlement of the alienation suit, the princess announced she was to undergo an operation to correct spine injuries she suffered when an unknown person attacked her.

The decision yesterday severad her interest in the disputed property and confirmed its sale to satisfy notes held by the defendants in the action.

Jury to End War Contract Probe Today

Woodring Completes His Testimony After 2 Days on Stand.

Lyons and McNeil Will Appear Before Body This Morning.

Hearing of testimony in the investigation of War Department contracts is expected to be concluded today, David A. Pine, assistant United States Attorney, in charge of the investigation, said last night.

He added, however, that the jury might take several days to consider indictments and might not report until next week.

Harry H. Woodring, assistant Secretary of War, late yesterday concluded two days' testimony before the jury.

Woodring, it is understood, gave a complete story of activities of his office during the past year as they involved automobile purchases and sale of surplus war materials.

Woodring also was questioned concerning a diary kept by his secretary, Mrs. Kate Buckingham, which included names of all persons who have visited the office. Mrs. Buckingham was a recent witness before the jury. Woodring has appeared three times.

The first witness today is expected to be Robert W. Lyons, Indiana and New York lawyer, who is said to have been interested in the War Department's $10,000,000 motorization program. He will be followed by Ralph T. O'Neil, lawyer, and former national commander of the American Legion. Both Lyons and O'Neil have asked permission to testify.

Reports were circulated yesterday made into alleged poker and drinking parties attended by lobbyists and some Government employes. Pine said nothing of the kind had been called to his attention.

Carnera Rules 3-1 Favorite as Rain Threatens Miami Title Bout

Financial 'Flop' Seen With $30,000 in Till; Loughran Confident

Garden Anxious to Avert Postponement Until Thursday Night.

$50,000 Gate Prospect, Setting New Low for Modern Title Bout.

MIAMI, Fla., Feb. 27 (AP).—The David and Goliath duel of the prize ring, huge Primo Carnera's heavyweight title defense tomorrow night against little Tommy Loughran, wobbled today before a back-hand slap of the elements that have been torturing the East with blizzards and cold for weeks.

Instead of snow, blustery rain dropped down upon Miami to cripple ticket sales and fight preparations as completely as the recent storms tied up New York and New England. To add to the gloom, the weather man predicted that tomorrow night might be still cooler with the threat of more showers overhanging the situation.

Postponement Possible.

If the bad weather continues, the bout probably will be postponed until Thursday night, but the complications that would set in thereby have the Madison Square Garden promoters, vowing that the bat'' will go on unless the situation gets absolutely impossible.

Only about $30,000 worth of tickets had been sold before the box-office attendants joined with every one else today just watching it rain. Many of those with reservations had planned to leave here directly after the fight and they were running around in a fine flurry tonight, worrying deeply about what to do. Railroad officials said, too, that there were two train sections containing 31 cars on the way here from New York, and Miami already is so crowded that in the event of a postponement these new arrivals probably would have to take to the open fields and the beaches.

$75,000 Gate Goal.

Despite one block of 2,000 front ringside seats that are being sold for $20 each, representing possible receipts right there of almost $40,000, the most optimistic prediction of the Madison Square Garden promoters is for a total gate of $75,000. It is entirely possible that receipts will not run over $50,000, thereby returning the heavyweight championship back almost to the days when the title changed hands in back yards, barns and barges for nothing but side bets.

The low record for heavyweight championship matches outdoors under Marquis of Queensberry rules was set way back in 1897, when Bob Fitzsimmons knocked out Jim Corbett, of Carson City, Nev., with receipts only $22,000.

Trained to perfection, the 260-pound Carnera and his 185-pound challenger left the weather and ticket worries to their managers as they took a bit of light exercise to keep muscles on edge.

Carnera 3-1 Favorite.

Carnera, still held a 3-to-1 favorite for the first heavyweight title match Florida has planned since Corbett knocked out Charlie Mitchell at Jacksonville 40 years ago, spent the day walking and resting.

Confident that he will return the title to American hands that held it until Max Schmeling, the German, came along, and Carnera, the Italian, followed him, Loughran shadow boxed, skipped rope, and punched the bag for six rounds at his training quarters in West Palm Beach. He will not come into Miami until the time for the weighing in at 1:30 p. m. (Eastern sandard time) tomorrow.

Loughran will depend on his speed and boxing skill to keep out of the path of the enormous champion through 15 rounds, but few were optimistic of his chances. In the final two days of training Carnera suddenly hit his stride after appearing worried and woefully inept in his earlier drills.

Predicts Three-Round K. O.

"I'll knock him out in three rounds," the champion said. "He will run and I will chase him. As soon as I catch him, boom—out he goes."

A change in arrangements today will give snowbound New York a chace to listen to a radio description of the match. Through a long distance telephone hook-up, the bout will be broadcast from a single station, WMAC, in New York.

Nats' Reporting Date Is Moved Up

Infielders and Outfielders Due at Biloxi March 15.

Word from Clark Griffith, Washington Club president, who is now vacationing at the Biloxi Spring training camp, is to the effect that he has decided to get the Nat infielders and outfielders down to business earlier than he first planned. As a result, they have been ordered to report at the Mississippi base on March 15, instead of on March 18.

The Nats' first exhibition game is slated against the Cleveland Indians on March 23 and Griffith wants to have his team a little nearer playing form for this game than would have been the case under the original plan.

The Nat battery men are due to report at Biloxi in time for a workout next Monday and indications are that the group leaving here Saturday afternoon will be comprised almost entirely of newspapermen. A few will be picked up en route, but as "Gen." Al Crowder is already at the training base, Monte Weaver is taking preliminary workouts at Hot Springs, and Ray Prim is visiting in Alabama, this trio will not join the party, as originally planned. Neither will Catcher Cliff Bolton climb aboard the Nats' train at High Point, as usual, unless he quickly decides to accept the salary terms offered.

Singing Wood To Compete In Derby

Trainer for Mrs. Whitney Denies Report Colt Will Not Run.

NEW YORK, Feb. 27 (U.P.).—James W. Healy, trainer of Mrs. John Hay Whitney's Kentucky Derby hopeful, Singing Wood, in a telegram to the writer from Miami today denied reports that the Belmont Futurity winner had been declared out of the Kentucky Derby.

Healy added that the colt was a certain starter in the Kentucky Derby providing he can have him conditioned for the race.

Singing Wood was the leading money-winning thoroughbred in 1933 with earnings of $88,050. He started nine times, winning three races and finishing second and third on two other occasions. His principal victory was in the Belmont Futurity, which he won by a whisker from the Kentucky invader, Sir Thomas.

Such shrewd horsemen as Judge Frank Bryan and the late Joseph McLennan adjudged the son of Royal Minstrel-Glade the best juvenile of 1933. Singing Wood is 20 to 1 in the winter books.

Two Others Named.

Two other nominees from the Whitney farms have been named for the sixtieth running of America's premier horse race, but it is doubtful if they will be pointed for the big race. They are The Immortal II, an Irish-bred colt, and White Bird, a gelded son of Peter-Pan Wasp.

The Immortal II was not campaigned extensively on the continent last year. He went to the post only six times. He was returned winner of three of his races and finished second and third on two other occasions. No figures are available on the amount of money he won. He is a 40-to-1 chance in the futures.

White Bird is a gelding of practically unknown quality. He made but one trip to the races, finishing out of the money after a dull performance. He is one of the outsiders in the prerace betting.

Malcewicz Test For Jim Londos

Lively Scrap in Offing for Mat Fans.

Jimmy Londos, world's rassling champion in nine States, three counties and a couple of burgs, comes to the Auditorium tomorrow night for what should prove to be his hardest match in this man's town. The Gorgeous Greek takes on Joe Malcewicz, a cagey veteran, who knows just as much as Londos, who is just as fast, just as strong and who doles out punishment in a mighty punishing manner.

Both are what might be termed clean rasslers—Malcewicz because he is an old-timer who started in the game when the matmen wrestled and Londos, perhaps, because he does not want to risk losing his title claims by means of a disqualification—but it should be a good, lively scrap just the same. True, both throw thor-hammers and toss each other out of the ring on occasions, but neither resorts to unethical tactics. Because of an injury to Malcewicz, the referee stopped their last bout after more than an hour of action. Malcewicz was leading in points then and promises to "get" Londos tomorrow night. And he has an excellent chance of doing so.

Rudy Dusek and Sammy Stein mingle in the semifinal, while three promising curtain-raisers complete the card. Half price will be required of women fans.

Cave Man or Fencer—Which?

By Paul Gallico.

MIAMI BEACH, Fla., Feb. 27 (Spl.).—This bright, pink and sun-lit town (over which deep gray storm clouds are scudding at the present moment) is in the gentle throes of its first heavyweight championship prize fight. I do not know when I have seen it gentler. It would not be fair to say that nobody cares, but I can say that nobody cares an awful lot. I suspect that the fight really belongs inside the patio of the Bath or Surf Club, where a fight might be set up and the spectators limited to those social parties who are always at the front pews for everything.

The middleman has been requested to fork over $11 each for ringside seats, a good stiff tariff, and one which entitles him to stick his nose smack up against the canvas and watch the fighters bleed. However, when he gets into the arena he will find himself sitting behind parties who have paid $20 a seat by what amounted practically to private subscription.

There is nothing for him to do but settle back into his pew, gaze sadly at the backs of the necks of the $20 guys, murmur "Foiled again," and hope that the brawlers put on the show.

This business tomorrow night is an official heavyweight championship fight over the 15-round championship distance, with a decision to be rendered by two judges and a referee. It features the champion of the world, Primo Carnera, the 260-pound Pithecanthropus Erectus.

His opponent is Tommy Loughran, former light heavyweight champion of the world, a skilled boxer and now a challenger for the heavyweight championship at 185 pounds and a challenger by every right because he has licked every notable heavyweight who would fight him. However, comparing the height, weight and strength of the two men, it is a championship bout by courtesy of nomenclature only.

Actually it isn't a fair match on the face of it. For Loughran is an aging pugilist who all his life has depended upon speed to carry him out of danger. His legs are tired legs, and, above all, he carries no weapon of true offense into the ring with him. Always a light hitter, it is generally granted that he can win only by piling up points or touches in the manner of a skilled fencer in a friendly bout with button foils.

There are, however, complicating features to this which do not make this match quite as cut-and-dried as it seems on paper. And I might as well here go on record as hunching Loughran to win the heavyweight championship of the world by beating Carnera and pulling the greatest surprise and upset in boxing. I can not say I know just how he is going to do it at the moment, but the set-up looks just great for another one of those long shots coming through.

The chief complicating feature is that our big man, a gorilla in strength if ever there was one in human guise, has been taught how to box, how to fence with his left, how to retreat, has been educated in the attack and riposte, and houses inside his enormous skull unfortunately considerable intelligence and no little imagination.

The set-up for a man of King Kong proportions, fighting an average-sized human being would be to drum his breasts, let out a ferocious roar, sail in, ripping, clawing and clubbing until the smaller man was battered into the earth.

Last night we dined at Primo's villa, with Louis Soresi and Billy Duffy and Billy De Foe, of Carnera's camp, and Col. Kilpatrick of the Madison Square Garden, and later listened to his discussing his opponent and his own plan of campaign, with, as I say, much too much intelligence. He recognized in Loughran the old boxing master who had beaten Baer when Max was at his best, who had tricked the giants, Schaaf and Impelletierre, who had make Sharkey look foolish. "I must go easy the first few rounds," said Primo, "and see what he will do. After I find out what he will do then I can make my own plans. But I must be very careful with this Loughran. He is very clever." Here you see, is not the frame of mind of a killer. Our big man-beast is going to turn boxer on us.

Of course, the real joke of the fight is that I gather from what Kilpatrick said that Tom has abandoned his boxing tactics and has been sailing into the big men he has been sparring with at Palm Beach, men like Ace Clark, the Philadelphia colored heavyweight, who gave Primo so much trouble one night.

If Carnera becomes the delicate fencer and Loughran turns into the cave man it will be just too funny for words, and, of course, anything can happen.

Carnera is fully aware of the dreadful spot into which his management has lured him. And to tell the truth, I feel sorry for him. In English that was graphic enough, he told us last night that he knows Loughran doesn't even have to hit him to score a point.

"He just touch me with his glove . . . the crowd will go 'Oh, oh, oh, look what he is doing to Carnera." Because he is small, he can get away with anything he wishes. If I complain to the referee, how does that look, a big man like me to complain? If he complain, or if I do anythink that is bad, Owoom, the crowd will yell. You think that does not make any difference? It makes plenty difference. If Loughran will come to me, that will be fine. But if I must chase him, ah, that will be another kind of fight."

Eastern Loses Thriller to Emerson

Wheeler's One-Handed Last Minute Goal Decides Game, 29 to 28.

IN another of their typically dramatic battles, Emerson Institute nosed out a one-point victory over Eastern High on the Boys Club court yesterday, a desperately tossed basket in the fleeting seconds of play by Waverly Wheeler, Emerson's speedy forward, providing the winning margin, 29 to 28.

It was the third defeat of the season for the Eastern lads, holders of Washington's high school title, and contributed little toward settling the mutual claims of both Eastern and Emerson for the mythical schoolboy championship of the city, Eastern having earned a 31 to 30 victory over its rival earlier in the season. Both schools are entered in the South Atlantic High and Prep School tournaments to be held at Washington and Lee University next week, but in separate divisions.

Emerson in Uphill Fight.

It was an uphill struggle all the way for Emerson, the Institute quintet trailing on the short end of a 17-to-6 score at the half. A spirited rally brought the count to 21 to 16 at the beginning of the final period but, with two minutes to play, Eastern apparently had the game on ice with a 27 to 22 lead.

Coger and Tipton counted, however, in quick succession. Edilon made good on a free throw for Eastern and Tipton did likewise for Emerson, bringing the count to 28-27. Wheeler then took a one-hand shot from a hot scrimmage near the basket and the whistle blew shortly after the next play.

Brother of Pipgras Is Signed by Albany

Martinsville, Va., Feb. 27 (Spl). Fred Pipgras, Martinsville's pitching ace during the 1933 season and a brother of George Pipgras of the Boston Americans, has signed a contract with the Albany club of the International League. Pipgras will train with the rookie squad in Martinsville for three weeks, beginning March 25. With the Albany club also is another brother of Pipgras, Edward, who will train with the Barnwell, S. C., squad of the Albany organization.

Paul Dunlop, star first baseman for the local club last year, also has affixed his name to an Albany contract. He will train at Barnwell. Dunlop's home is at Siler City. After leaving North Carolina University, he played in the Blue Ridge League, coming to the Martinsville club midseason last year.

New Orleans Feature To Fortunate Youth

New Orleans, Feb. 27 (AP).—S. S. Friedlein's Fortunate Youth, making his first start after disappointing his owner at Houston, Tex., ran 6 furlongs in 1:12 2-5 today to whip a smart field of sprinters in the featured handicap at the Fair Grounds.

Taking the lead at the half-mile post, the 7-year-old son of Lucky Hour crossed the finish line a length in front of his stablemate, Blue Day, racing for A. G. Tarn. The two horses are trained by Tarn. Third in the field of seven was Frank Seremba's Zekiel, a winner the last time out.

With Blue Day highly regarded, the entry went to the post the choice and paid $6.60 to win and the same to place.

Foxx Steals Show; Drills With Giants

Miami Beach, Fla., Feb. 27 (U.P.).—Jimmy Foxx, who is engaged in a salary argument with the owners of the Philadelphia Athletics, could not resist the call of the diamond any longer today and had his first workout of the year.

He stole the show at the drill of the Giants. Getting permission from Travis Jackson, who was in command in the absence of Bill Terry, Foxx got into the uniform of the A's and had a long workout, getting a big hand for some nifty plays around first base.

Foxx, who has been offered $11,000, a reduction of $4,000, insists he will not sign even for his old salary of $15,000. He is to see Connie Mack at Fort Myers on Thursday.

Funeral Rite Today For McGraw

Body Will Be Taken to Baltimore Following New York Service.

NEW YORK, Feb. 27 (AP).—The body of John J. McGraw lay in state today in his suburban home while New York City prepared to pay its last respects to the man who was its baseball idol for 30 years.

Tomorrow morning the body will be brought, under motorcycle escort, to St. Patrick's Cathedral on Fifth avenue, where a solemn requiem mass for the dead will be celebrated, the coffin then will be taken by train to Baltimore and placed in a vault to await burial when the winter snows have melted.

All through the day friends of his baseball days pushed their way through the deep snowdrifts of Pelham Manor to the big brick and stucco house the fiery former manager of the Giants bought only three years ago.

Flowers Piled High.

A funeral wreath, powdered with the snow of the night before, hung on the door. Inside, at one end of the big living room was the casket, a candle burning at each end, a crucifix between. Piled on either side and around the walls were flowers.

Off the living room on the sun porch, where McGraw used to read detective stories after his day at the Polo Grounds, were gathered his sisters, a few friends, Mrs. Christy Mathewson, widow of the great Giant pitcher who was McGraw's closest friend, and Christy, jr. They talked in low tones of Mathewson and McGraw, as though they still lived, of the great Giant teams of 1904 and '05, of '11 and '12, of '21, '22, '23, '24.

Mrs. McGraw attended by her sister, remained in seclusion upstairs, receiving only the most intimate friends.

Tribute by Many.

The flowers came from persons in all walks of life; from George M. Cohan and John McCormack, the Boston Red Sox and the Chicago Cubs, the Elks Club of Baltimore and old players whose names have almost been forgotten, from President John A. Heydler of the National League and an usher at the ball park.

Among the callers were Tom Yawkey and Edward Trowbridge Collins, of the Boston Red Sox; Arlie Latham, a Giant substitute in 1909; Dick Rudolph, former great Boston pitcher; Harvey Traband, secretary of the National League, and John Seyes, vice president of the Chicago Cubs.

To Fill Church.

Those and many others, all those fans to whom McGraw's Giants were a club of supermen, are expected to fill St. Patrick's tomorrow, while his parish priest, the Rev. Vincent De Paul Mulry, celebrates the mass and the full choir of the church chants the responses.

The services will be held at 10 a. m. and the funeral party will take a Pennsylvania train for Baltimore at 12:30 p. m.

Accompanying the body will be Mrs. McGraw, the baseball leader's two sisters and only surviving close relatives, Mrs. Frank Gray, of New Caanan, Conn., and Mrs. James F. Connelly, of Camillus, N. Y., Charles A. Stoneham and Edward T. Brannick, president and assistant secretary, respectively, of the Giants, and several of Mrs. McGraw's relatives, who live in Baltimore.

Heise, Hadley Signed By Cards and Browns

St. Louis, Feb. 27 (AP).—The signing of Clarence Heise, left-handed Columbus American Association pitcher, who last year won 17 victories and led all other hurlers in the loop, was announced today by the St. Louis Cardinals.

Irving Hadley, a pitcher, who won 15 games for the tail-end Browns last season, today signed a contract for 1934 with the St. Louis American League team.

Federal Sports Group Is Planned by Moser

The formation of an athletic association for Government workers, under the auspices of the National Federation of Federal Employes, is being planned by J. Earle Moser, manager of the Federal Unionist baseball team of the Departmental League.

The association would support representative teams in baseball, basket ball, bowling, tennis, swimming and other year-round sports.

Gledhill New Pro Tennis Convert

Is Signed With Chapin to Join Bill Tilden's Touring Troupe.

Two Groups to Migrate Westward and Play in Coast Tourneys.

NEW YORK, Feb. 27 (AP).—Professional tennis made further inroads on the amateur ranks today as Keith Gledhill, of Santa Barbara, Calif., present ninth ranking player of the United States, and Alfred H. Chapin, jr., of Springfield, Mass., seventh ranking star in 1926, agreed to join Big Bil Tilden's touring troupe.

They will play their first matches for pay at New Haven March 21 and then make a Nation-wide tour with Tilden and Ellsworth Vines, jr., former United States and Wimbledon title holder, who deserted the Simon pures last fall and since has made some $30,000 for himself.

Tour to Continue.

Announcement of the decision of the two players was made by Bill O'Brien, copromoter with Tilden, who also disclosed plans for the continuation of the tour now being made by Tilden, Vines, Henri Cochet, former ranking amateur of the world, and Martin Plaa, the French professionals.

The four headliners will be split between the two touring groups; Cochet and Plaa joining with Vincent Richards and Bruce Barnes, long time converts to the professional cause.

The two groups will travel by different routes to the Pacific Coast where "Davis Cup" series, similar to that recently held in Madison Square Garden among Tilden, Vines, Cochet and Plaa, will be played at Los Angeles April 21-23 and at San Francisco April 25-26. They then again will part company and start back East, ending their engagements on May 13 just in time to start play in a series of professional tournaments.

Intimate of Vines.

The signing of Gledhill was no surprise as he is an intimate of Vines, with whom he won the National doubles titles in 1932, but Chapin had been out of top flight tennis for several years.

"Our signing Chapin to a contract may come as a surprise," O'Brien said, "but he has convinced us in private trials that he can hold his own in professional ranks and he'll surprise a lot of people with the excelence of his play."

Big Money Sport.

From a profession which held few good players and was made up largely of instructors, professional tennis has grown in the last few years to one of the "big money" sports.

Suzanne Lenglen, Richards and Mary K. Browne set the style in 1926 with a Nation-wide tour under the banner of C. C. (Cash and Carry) Pyle, Tilden made it official in 1930 when he entered the movies and Vines and Tilden carried it to an all-time high January 10 in Madison Square Garden as they played to a capacity crowd of 16,000.

Several other well-known amateurs are said to have been attracted by the important money being made by their professional brothers and O'Brien indicated further announcements can be expected.

Girl Sponsors Named For Tourney Quintets

Two pretty Raleigh society girls have been named as sponsors for Maryland's basket ball team during the Southern Conference tournament opening at Raleigh, N. C., tomorrow. They are the Misses Mary Helen Stewart and Mable York.

Each team will have two sponsors. Others honored in a similar manner are the Misses Rachel Wright and Mary Wyatt, University of Virginia; Nancy Cox and Sadie Root, Washington and Lee; Edith Wyatt and Mary Poyner, V. M. I. They will see their respective teams in all their games, and be guests at a dance at the Carolina Country Club Saturday which will follow the championship game.

Potomac State Beats Shepherd Five, 43-40

Shepherdstown, W. Va., Feb. 27 (Spl.).—A see-saw contest that saw the lead change hands no less than five times finally went to Potomac State Teachers College by a score of 43-40 when a last-minute rally by the Shepherd State College fell 3 points short.

The Shepherd girls' team made up for the boys' defeat by drubbing the Potomac sextet 46-7.

Fire Mask Comes From Behind to Triumph by Half Length in Mud at Hialeah

Porter Mount Overtakes Bittybit

Victor Returns $15.80; Jockey's 25th Winner of Meeting.

Sky Haven Takes First; Gibby's Choice, 10-1, Wins Handily.

HIALEAH PARK, Feb. 27 (AP).—Fire Mask, the Coldstream Stud's Florida Derby candidate, showed excellent mud running ability in winning the Ormond Purse from six other 3-year-olds here this afternoon. With Earl Porter chalking up his twenty-fifth victory of the meeting, Fire Mask came from behind in impressive fashion to beat A. A. Baroni's highly fancied Bittybit by a half-length. W. Sachsenmaier's Plight lost the place by four lengths.

Fire Mask, a recent winner in a 6-furlong dash, paid $15.80 and covered the 8 furlongs over very heavy going in the splendid time of 1:39 2-5.

Despite the showers and track condition, the stands were well filled. It was one of the most disagreeable days of the season.

Comes From Rear.

Until Fire Mask made her unexpected finish, backers of Bittybit felt very confident. The Baroni gelding disposed of Zulu Lad and Flint Shot and opened up an apparently safe advantage rounding out of the back stretch. Porter brought Fire Mask from a rear position and saved ground turning for home. The filly responded with fine courage under the Geneva lad's hard urging and caught the favorite a few yards from the finish.

The well-played Sky Haven proved the best mudder in the small field that contested the mile test, first on the card. J. Ambrose, a "double bug" rider, brought the gelding to the judges an easy victor by a length and a half over Billies Orphan, while Canon Law lost the place by a similar margin. Sky Haven returned $6.30.

Hope Eternal Wins.

Hope Eternal, $6.60 choice, had no trouble leading nine other maiden 2-year-olds to the line in the second event, but the filly's backers did not count their winnings until the official sign was flashed. The daughter of Eternal swerved in badly after the break and several other horses suffered interference, notably Sun Reverie. The latter ran a game race, heading Kings Pleasure for the place. Hope Eternal easily outfooted the field to score by three lengths.

Fancy flight was made a 1-to-2 shot in the third race, but it took the filly's utmost to score a nose victory. There were those who thought Bubbler beat the favorite on the wire. Fred Almy was third, two lengths behind, after suffering interference while running between the first and second horses in the final drive. Fancy Flight stole a long lead but bubbler, on the outside, made up ground rapidly in the last furlong.

Gibby's Choice Scores.

Rain was falling steadily during the fourth contest, but the elements meant nothing to Gibby's choice, a 7-year-old gelding, which ran away from a small field at odds of better than 10 to 1. Well Built and Southard, both well backed, followed the winner home.

Standout, a 5-to-1 hazard, got up in the final strides under Jimmy Hunter's heady handling to account for the sixth purse. Carbon lost the verdict by a scant head while saving the place by a length and a half from Madwind.

Butter Beans, $7.70, won the closing event by four lengths. Major General beat High Proof by the same distance for the place.

Strange as It Seems —By John Hix

For further proof address the author, inclosing a stamped envelope for reply. Reg. U. S. Pat. Off.

By definition the Orient is the place upon the horizon where the sun first appears in the morning. It is the first definition of the word in many of the large dictionaries. Contrariwise, the Occident is defined as the place on the horizon where the sun is last seen at nightfall.

By these difinitions, then, the sun always sets in the Occident, but never rises there. It also never sets in the Orient, but always rises there. Orient comes to us originally from the Latin "oriens," of which the present participle was "oriri," which meant "to rise." It was later adopted by the French, and came then into the English language.

Through this derivation the word came to mean, also, the place where the sun rises, which is, of course, the east. Eventually the so-called Eastern world became the "Orient." In the same manner the word "Occident" came to mean the Western world.

Baron Munchausen is no myth—only his stories are myths. The real Baron Munchausen was Hieronymus Karl Friedrich, Freiherr von Munchausen, of Bodenwerder in Hanover. He lived in the eighteenth century, and saw service with the Russians against the Turks. After his retirement in 1760 he amused himself by relating his strange experiences as a soldier and sportsman. His stories were so exaggerated that his name became the trademark for impossible exaggerations.

At the Post . . .

Dear Al: Hialeah Race Track, Feb. 27.

Bill Bennings' best bet, Butter Beans, Balaski. That's the combination that accounted for today's seventh race and saved us from a shutout. And I'm deeply indebted to Clocker Mike for some boistrous rooting. In fact, Mike was rooting all day, but it was not until the finale that he proved productive. Until then, his best was to get a fair sprinkling of horses in the money. I warned him that he must do better soon or I will give him another vacation. I didn't ask him but I believe he is clocking horses with an hour glass. Some of the 2-year-olds he has dug up are not good enough to make the third row on the Glen Echo merry-go-round.

BILL.

First race—David W. gets the Bennings call in the day's opener. This one has improved since arriving in this State and is reported ready to crack down. Cabochon will have something to say in the stretch run and should make a close battle of it. Xerseise to take care of the others.

Second race—Canobie Lake has shown excellent speed in recent efforts and can be depended upon to do a lot of running in this field, Earle Maxwell has been close twice. Deserves attention. Apertitif for the show.

Third race—Propagandist appears capable of turning back this kind of opposition. Clocker Mike has given the word on the workouts. Erubus is speedy and can not be overlooked entirely. Piety, with 101 pounds, is dangerous.

Fourth race—Traffic Judge may be preparing for another killing. However, I know the veteran is a mighty sharp horse right now. He can get away winging here and he will be hard to catch. Wedding Ring turned in a fine win for me last out. Drombo's closing rush will find him close at the finish.

Fifth race—Bartering Kate failed me recently, but I'll string along. She will take care of Aunt Flor and Macadam, I do believe.

Sixth race—I'll take the Smallman entry of Golden Fate and Sabula. Both recent winners, this pair will being through a lot of hoofs even in this company. Quel and Gift of Roses for the other awards.

Seventh race—Bright Beauty gets 10 pounds from Renewed in this contest on the turf. I believe the race lies between this pair. Polo Bar takes off some weight and could make a three-cornered battle of it.

Eighth race—Just Fun, Fort Dearborn and Gen. Lejuene is the way I fancy them in the day's final.

Lively Scraps Loom in Mat Tourney

Bantam and Featherweight Boys Provide Action at Blacksburg.

BLACKSBURG, Va., Feb. 27 (Spl.).—The bantam and featherweight boys promise some of the livelist crusading for titles when Southern Conference wrestlers go into the annual tournament at Virginia Tech Friday and Saturday.

Four 118-pounders and five 126-pounders will square off in quest of laurels in the weight divisions in which strength is seldom found and pure mat science and skill reign supreme. Shades of such brilliant performers of yesteryear in conference ranks as Tom Lowe and Colby Graves will stalk cross the arena in Tech's War Memorial Hall. Perhaps one or more of today's calssy batch of little fellows will air a few tricks that eclipse Lowe's famous "cradle-hold" of a decade ago at V. M. I. Perhaps Graves might learn a new one or two if he comes up from Auburn to watch the scrap in the weights he ruled a few years ago as Tech's star.

Pace Setters This Year.

Frank Crew, of Washington and Lee, and Dave Morrah, of North Carolina State, have been pacesetters all season in the 118-pound class. Charlie DeCamps, of V. M. I., must be reckoned with. Nor can Carl Lugrin, plucky Tech sophomore, be counted out of the running.

Crew is just a sophomore but he's making mat history for the Generals. Two years of wrestling are stretched in his wake and he knows not the sting of defeat. This season he has defeated Merson, of Johns Hopkins, and Lugrin, of Tech, by fall, and Harris, of Davidson; Clay, of Navy, and Dave Morrah by time advantage. His margin over Morrah was barely enough to win. DeCamp has whipped foes from Davidson and Carolina and tied with Capt. Glass, ace of the Temple team. Lugrin defeated Darden, of Carolina.

Have Lost Once Each.

Fred Sarkis, of W. and L., and Russell Minter, of Tech, have cut a wide path among 126 pounders. In six meets, Sarkis has scored two falls and two decisions and has lost only to Dougherty, Navy star. In five meets, Minter pinned entries from Carolina State, Davidson and V. M. I., scored heavy time decision over Tyree, of Carolina, and lost only to Sarkis after a nip and tuck battle.

Colin Kerr, of State, has lost only one bout. Capt. Clark Mathewson, of Carolina, has three wins to his credit. V. M. I. will call on either W. C. Holt, Jim Jones or D. S. McMillin to uphold the tricolor. With such an array of talent, the 126-pound class should provide some of the cleverest wrestling in the history of the conference tournament.

Indoor Polo Set.

New York, Feb. 27 (U.P.).—The Eastern sectional indoor polo championship, which will determine the team to represent the East in matches with the West, will begin March 24, it was announced today by the executive committee of the Indoor Polo Association of America. Teams from New England, Pennsylvania, Maryland, New Jersey and New York will compete.

Wayne Chambers, George Washington end in 1932, is now a football coach . . . at the Picher (Okla.) High School . . . and his team was undefeated the first year he handled it . . . in 1933 . . . Bobby Goldstein has developed a punishing right hand shock punch . . . for his bout with Norment Quarles in Richmond next month . . . one experienced referee who worked a Quarles bout in the Southern Conference tournament at Charlottesville said that a good, fast right was the only thing that would defeat the North Carolina lightweight.

Stocks Regain Poise in Gains; Sales Lighter

Prices Mend and Market Closes Firmer; Dealing, 1,262,840 Shares.

New York, Feb. 27 (AP).—Markets were firmer today, though the turnover in securities went considerably under recent volumes. Stocks mended slowly and it was apparent that most traders were holding to the sidelines. The average net advance, however, was almost a point.

Many rails, steels, metals, farm implements, oils, merchandising issues and an assortment of specialties improved fractions to about a point, some had larger gains, but they were exceptions.

How much of the buying represented covering was impossible to estimate, but support from that quarter presumably contributed to the firmer tone. Transfers totaled 1,262,840 shares, one of the year's smallest full-time volumes.

Labor Situation Watched.

The financial farternity still kept an eye on labor "situations" and also found time to study the communication company bill. Stocks in that category did little, though American Telephone and Western Union both dipped a point net, the former having most of its decline in the final dealings. Postal preferred eased slightly, but International Telephone improved. There was little trading in any of them.

Mild interest was directed toward a handful of lower priced stocks, including Evans Products, Shattuck, Spencer Kellogg, Motor Products, White Motor and Union Bag, all of which rose around a point. Wilson preferred was up 3 on the declaration of another dividend against accumulations. Aircrafts were mostly firm.

Wheat's come back helped Case to an advance of more than a point. Buyers of the Steel shares were doubtless encouraged by forecasts of a substantially higher operating ratio before the time for seasonal tapering off arrives, but gains of those equities were largely fractional.

Rails Improve Moderately.

Rails also improved moderately. Norfolk & Western, thinly traded, was an exception, sagging about 3 points as a $4 dividend came off the quotation, half of this payment being the extra. U. S. Smelting closed nearly 3 higher.

Money markets were easy as ever. Excess reserves of Federal Reserve member banks, it is said, are now just over the billion mark for the country as a whole, thus setting a new high record. Gold importations have figured largely in effecting the recent increases.

The Treasury's financial requirements for March are still in the conjectural stage; its principal maturity next month is a $460,000,000 issue of indebtedness certificates, in addition to which three bill issues totaling approximately $300,000,000 come due. Whether any long term offerings are being planned for the next three or four weeks has not been revealed.

Twelve-Point Program.

Gen. Johnson's twelve-point program for revising NRA codes and developments in connection with veterans' legislation were prominent in the news from the National Capital, but hardly seemed to be market factors. January returns on railroad earnings continued their favorable comparisons with one and two years ago.

American Metal Market says railroad and farm implement business is beginning to have an important place in the steel industry's rising trend. This review thinks a 50 per cent operating rate is "due soon" and that a 60 per cent level "is a possibility if not a probability."

Carriers are buying chiefly for building and repair of rolling stock, and "steel producers are skeptical whether the railroads will actually take more than one-half of the rail tonnage in the Eastman program."

Foreign Markets.

(Associated Press.)

London—The European situation checked business on the stock exchange today, especially in foreign securities, which turned easier. Gilt-edge securities and transatlantic issues were very steady, while Kaffirs improved on South African buying. Oil shares eased on unfavorable American advices. The market closed irregular.

Paris—Although trading was dull, prices on the bourse held their ground, rentes improving. The closing was steady.

Berlin—Prices on the boerse continued their upward surge, potash shares being in special demand. The closing was steady.

Tobacco Market.

Abingdon, Va., Feb. 27 (Spl.).—Burley tobacco sales on the local market will continue through Friday. Sales Supervisor R. W. McFarland said today.

Mr. McFarland said he had recommended to the Abingdon warehousemen that markets remain open through Friday instead of closing tomorrow, as originally intended, a season having developed in which weather conditions are good for curing the tobacco and facilitating marketing.

The Abingdon market this year has sold more than double the amount of tobacco auctioned last season.

First Month of Experience With Our New 59.06 Cent Dollar Ends Without Any Significant Change in Level of Commodity Prices.

By Ralph West Robey.

Today marks the end of the first month of experience with a 59.06 cent dollar. It is interesting, therefore, to see to what degree the claims and assurances of the devaluationists have been realized. None of them, or at least none of them of standing, said there would be an immediate adjustment of prices, but nevertheless it was their contention that prices should rise. Actually the month has witnessed no appreciable increase in values on the average.

In presenting the facts on this there are numerous indices that one might use with approximately the same results. A convenient one is that published by Moody's Investors Service. It is based upon the spot prices for 15 basic commodities. Each commodity is weighted in proportion to its relative importance. Further, which is an advantage for the present purpose, the index not only is highly sensitive but as well is available on a daily basis. The base of the index—the price average which equals 100—is December 31, 1931.

Increase During February Too Small To Indicate Trend.

On February 1, when we adopted the 59.06-cent dollar, the index stood at 135.4. From this it moved up gradually to 140.4 on February 16, an increase of less than 4 per cent. Since then prices have been weak, with a tendency to fall slightly, with the result that the index has dropped sufficiently to wipe out about one-half of this gain. For all practical purposes, therefore, one may say that there has been no appreciable change in prices, as measured by this index, during February.

Consider, for example, this movement with what has occurred at other times in the last 12 months. Approximately a year ago, at the time of the banking holiday, the index was 87. It remained at about this level until the middle of April, when the United States officially suspended the gold standard. Following that there was a rapid rise extending over four months, the highest point reached being on July 18, when the index was 149. This was an increase of over 70 per cent.

Heavy Liquidation Caused Sharp Drop in the Index.

Following this extraordinary increase, there was a sharp break, the index falling from 149 to 134 in four days. Thereafter, there were temporary periods of stability, and even some small rallies, but the general trend continued downward until Monday, October 16, when the index stood at 119. This was a drop of 20 per cent.

On the following Sunday, the gold-buying program of the Administration was announced. Between then and February 1 there were three distinct shifts in the trend. First was a rise, lasting until November 16, of over 9 per cent, and carrying the index to 130. Following this was a drop of 7 per cent, to 121, on December 21. Then came another rise that lifted the index to 136, or by 11 per cent, by the end of January.

All of the five distinct movements in price during the last 12 months, therefore, have been at least twice as great as the fluctuation in the last month. Further, and more interesting, is the fact that the two great movements occurred while gold was still $20.67 an ounce. Ultimately, I think, prices will advance much above the present level. When they do, however, it will not be because we devalued the dollar.

Wool Market.

Boston, Feb. 27 (A.P.).—(U. S. Department of Agriculture.)—There was a very moderate volume of business transacted in the wool market. The principal demand was on average French combing 64s and finer quality territory wool in original bags at 82@84, scoured basis. Medium quality wools moved to some extent, but the volume of sales was not up to expectations for this season of the year. Combing 48s, 50s, ¼-pound wool moved somewhat better than 56s, ⅜ blood, and more freely than early in the month.

Bonds Drive Upward Under Dull Trading

Secondary Loans Add to Price Strength; Sales, $12, 793,000.

New York, Feb. 27 (AP).—Bonds staged the dullest performance today since January 3, last, but a number of secondary issues managed to edge forward sufficiently to give the list a fairly firm appearance at the close.

Transfers involved a total of only $12,793,000, par value, compared with $14,465,000 yesterday.

The average for 60 domestic corporate loans held an advance of one-tenth of a point at 83.7.

Hesitancy of Market.

The hesitancy of the market was attributed to the familiar influences of recent sessions which included sporadic labor troubles, a mild lag in business due to unusual weather conditions and the thought that further curtailment of Civil Works Administration forces may affect earnings of some corporations.

Among the more active gainers of fractions to a point or more were some bonds of Alleghany Corporation, American Rolling Mill, American Telephone, American Water Works, Armour, Baltimore & Ohio, Canadian Pacific, Chesapeake Corporation, St. Paul, Chicago & Northwestern, Colorado Industrial, Erie, Great Northern, Hudson Coal, International Telephone, N. Y. Central, Nickel Plate, New Haven, Portland General Electric, Postal Telegraph, Frisco, Studebaker, United Drug, U. S. Rubber, Utilities Power & Light and Warner Bros.

The President's message on a Federal communications commission, and the subsequent introduction in Congress of bills covering the recommendations, apparently did not unduly stir this section of the utilities field.

Prime Investment Loans.

Prime investment loans were little better than steady and there were some soft spots scattered throughout the list. Western Pacific first 5s lost 3¾ points on a relatively heavy turnover following announcement that the company had requested bondholders to agree to the deferment of interest payments for three years in order to avoid a reorganization.

U. S. Government securities continued quiet, but the majority were a trifle higher. Followers of this department seemingly were waiting for Treasury indications as to March financing. Some banking quarters expected that an offering of 5-year notes might be attempted.

Foreign obligations exhibited little life, although bonds of Argentina, France, Germany and Cuba improved.

Cotton Rally Defeated by Liquidation

March Closes at 11.83 as Market Is Steady at 6 Points Up to 4 Down.

New York, Feb. 27 (AP).—A further decline of some 12 to 15 points in cotton on overnight selling orders was followed by rallies today.

May, after selling off to 11.77 under the early pressure, advanced to 12.04, but met a renewal of liquidation during the last hour and closed at 11.96. The general market closed steady net 6 points higher to 4 points lower with the late months relatively easy.

Steadiness in wheat and stocks contributed to the upturn, which carried March up to 11.90 and October 12.28, or about 20 to 27 points above the low prices of the morning on active positions. This bulge met a renewal of liquidation together with some reselling by early buyers and closing quotations showed reactions of some 6 to 10 points from the best.

Comparatively little Southern selling was reported here during the day and it was said the decline in prices had checked offerings from the interior.

Exports today 34,747, making 5,556,417 so far this season. Receipts 18,103. United States port stocks 3,448,289.

Cottonseed Oil.

Bleachable cottonseed oil was less active and prices a little easier today under liquidation and commission house selling, although there was enough trade buying to absorb the offerings and hold prices within narrow limits, with the market closing 1 to 2 points net lower. Sales were 15 contracts, bleachable spot, nominal; March, closed 5.08; May, 5.30; July, 5.57; September, 5.74; October, 5.76.

Optical Goods Export Drop Laid to Tariff

Exports of optical goods from the United States continued to decline during 1933, according to figures compiled in the Commerce Department's Specialties Division.

This decline, it is pointed out, was due not only to lack of demand resulting from the general business depression abroad, but also because of increased tariffs, exchange controls, quota systems, and other trade restrictions.

United States exports of optical goods began to lessen in 1927 just after the peak year of 1926 when exports were valued at $3,350,785. A slight recovery in 1929 resulted in total shipments of $2,783,842 in that year. Since then exports have receded to approximately one quarter of the peak-year trade.

Total sales abroad during 1933 were valued at $828,957, of which shipments of spectacles, eyeglasses, lenses and frames accounted for $657,677; lenses not fitted to instruments, $33,855. The remaining $137,425 was made up of "other optical goods."

Imports of optical goods into the United States during the past few years have been declining proportionately to exports, it is pointed out. One of the factors in this decline, according to trade opinion, is the better recognition by the public of American-made optical goods, the quality of which has greatly improved in recent years. Imports in 1933 were valued at $524,991, compared with $682,109 in 1932. Opera and field glasses numbered 39,759 valued at $125,172 while there were 103,500 dozen spectacles, eyeglasses, goggles, and parts, valued at $41,166. This was a decrease of 32,232 opera and field glasses amounting to $56,640, but an increase of 98,285 dozen spectacles, frames, &c., valued at $33,234, a substantial rise in receipts of cheap articles in this class.

English Ship Yards Hard Hit By Depression

London, Feb. 27 (U.P.).—The British shipping industry has been one of the hardest hit by the depression, yet at the end of 1933 it was building nearly half the world's tonnage.

In line with increases in other industries, shipbuilding in Great Britain and Ireland, at the end of the December quarter, showed an increase of 27,779 tons in the work in hand. The total of 331,541 tons was 106,044 tons greater than the tonnage being built at the end of December, 1932.

This tonnage, according to statistics issued by Lloyd's Register of Shipping, represents 43.8 per cent of total world construction. The next five countries were Japan, 106,760 tons; France, 90,656 tons; Sweden, 64,640 tons; Holland, 40,540 tons, and Spain, 35,724 tons.

While British shipbuilding staged a minor boom, tonnage under construction abroad declined to the lowest foreign total since June, 1909. In December it was 425,735 tons, a drop of about 27,000 tons compared with September.

Much of the improvement in the British position was due to the government's promise to resume construction of the giant Cunard liner, 534, intended for the North Atlantic service. Work was suspended on it in 1932 for lack of funds.

Car Loadings Gaining.

Chicago, Feb. 27 (AP).—The Chicago, Milwaukee, St. Paul & Pacific Railroad today reported 21,648 revenue cars loaded for the week ended February 24, comparing with 18,839 cars in the corresponding five-loading-day week of 1933.

U. S. Renews Efforts to Cut Wheat Crop

Another Drive to Begin at Once; Signers Will Get 8-Cent Benefit.

(Associated Press.)

Close behind reports of wheat acreage reductions in Europe, the Farm Administration yesterday arranged to reopen its campaign to cut down wheat plantings further in this country.

The reductions already pledged by growers under contracts signed last fall called for 13,876,759 acres to be taken out of production.

Under the international wheat agreement the United States agreed to reduce its exports by 15 per cent and set about reducing acreage by the same amount. The January 1 crop, however, showed that the reduction apparent at that time was only 7.2 per cent.

Davis Outlines Program.

Chester C. Davis, the farm administrator, in announcing resumption of the campaign, said it was intended to give farmers who did not sign last fall an opportunity to do so and was not an effort to make certain the 15 per cent reduction.

"We can not know until spring wheat is seeded and the number of acres abandoned is determined whether another campaign will be necessary to bring the total farther down," he said.

The bureau of agricultural economics reported that wheat sowings in Europe had decreased slightly and in French North Africa had been cut considerably. Up to today the United States was the only country affected by the international agreement that had taken definite steps to reduce production.

Work to Begin Immediately.

Work will begin immediately by the wheat production control committees, which conducted the first sign-up campaign, Davis said, and the work is expected to be completed within a short time.

The contract to be used will allow a longer base period, thus giving farmers who grow wheat intermittently a chance to qualify, he added, predicting that the majority of signatures would be obtained east of the Mississippi.

New signers will receive the second benefit payment of 8 cents a bushel, less local costs, due the original signers, but will not receive the 20 cents per bushel payment now being made. In addition they will receive all payments to be made during 1934 and 1935.

Davis called the production control plan "crop insurance and price insurance."

U. S. Fuel Oil Loses Favor on Cuban Market

The Dutch West Indies improved its position as a supplier of fuel oil to Cuba during 1933 at the expense of the United States and Mexico, according to a report to the Commerce Department from its Havana office.

Whereas, both the United States and Mexico supplied over 532,800 barrels of fuel oil in 1932, the imports from the two countries combined was less than 399,600 barrels in 1933. Thus, instead of each of these countries supplying approximately 23 per cent as in 1932, the United States accounted for only 8 per cent of Cuba's fuel oil imports in 1933 and Mexico only a little more than 7 per cent.

Total fuel oil imports into Cuba in 1933 amounted to 2,530,107 barrels, an increase of 5 per cent over the preceding year. Of this total Aurba and Cura accounted for 2,-109,961 barrels, or 83 per cent as compared with 1,293,825 barrels, or 54 per cent in 1932.

With the exception of fuel oil, substantial declines occurred in imports of petroleum products into Cuba in 1933. Imports of crude petroleum, on the other hand increased by 30 per cent, from 424,690 barrels in 1932 to 557,760 barrels in 1933. Only in the case of crude petroleum and fuel oil, the report points out, do American suppliers meet with any serious competition in the Cuban market.

Radio Waves And Ripples

IT looks very much as though our studio orchestras henceforth will do most of their work standing up.

When Frank Black, N. B. C. music director, first proposed it, the idea struck us as being merely a scheme for keeping the cymbal player from falling asleep.

But it seems we were wrong again. It is the verdict of National's technicians that "vertical music comes over" with more "brilliance and life" than the kind of music played by seated musicians.

Milton J. Cross, one of N. B. C.'s symphony announcers, explains it.

"Almost every man in the N. B. C. symphony formerly was a member of the New York, Boston, Philadelphia orchestras or other noted symphonies and is capable of performing as a solo artist should the occasion demand. Soloists invariably stand while playing in order to get freedom of movement for the accurate production of tonal effects."

Whitecaps.

WRC—Second original Southern folk music broadcast, "Jennie, Put the Kettle On," "Mississippi Sawyer," "The Turkish Rebellee," "The Farmer's Curst Wife" and "Cripple Creek," 4:45 p. m.; Gene Raymond, screen star, offers a scene from one of his forthcoming pictures as guest artist of the Troubadours, 9 p. m.; Eddie Peabody, Rudy Vallee's banjo wizard, beginning a new series of programs, 11 p. m.

WMAL—International broadcast from Japan, coronation ceremony of Henry Pu Yi, Emperor of Manchukuo, 5:15 p. m.; "God Gave Me Flowers," "Drink to Me Only With Thine Eyes," "Scythe Song," "The Dew Is Sparkling," John McCormack, 9:30 p. m.; Phil Harris and his St. Regis Orchestra, midnight.

WJSV—Constance Bennett interviewed by Luella Parsons in the first of a new Hollywood series, Raymond Paige's Orchestra, 1:15 p. m.; Albert Spalding in a program of the lighter classics, Drigo, Delibes and Beethoven, 8:30 p. m.; "Noche Azul," "Adios a Veru Cruz," "Ranchera-rita" and "Marie Elena," Tito Guizar, 6:45 p. m.

After the major networks had given up, WOL and the General Broadcasting System completed plans last night for broadcasting the Primo Carnera-Tommy Loughran fight in Miami tonight.

Sam Taub will handle the microphone, starting at 9:30 p. m.

Through 10,000 miles of space, National will flash ceremonies attending the coronation of Henry Pu Yi as Emperor of Manchukuo to the United States today.

Everything, including a part of the ritual in which the new Emperor prays and receives inspiration before ascending the throne and an English description of the ceremony will be heard here a day before it occurs. That's the difference an international date line can make. The time is 5:15 p. m.

Just before the actual broadcast, Frederick Moore, newspaper and magazine writer who spent 12 years in the Far East as an Associated Press correspondent and in the service of the Japanese government, will go on the air from N. B. C. studios to explain and interpret the scene.

Presentation of the first liquor license in the District to William C. Murphy, jr., president of the National Press Club, will be broadcast by WJSV this midnight.

George Ofutt, chairman of the liquor control board, will make the presentation in the presence of District Commissioner George Allen and Board Members Isaac Gans and Mrs. William B. Mason.

Chico and Groucho Marx have been picked as the permanent successors to Ethel Waters on Columbia's Sunday night American Revue. They go to work March 4.

WRC stayed on the air despite a power failure which cut off all lights and halted elevator service in the National Press Building yesterday morning.

Jim McGrath was on the air with a commercial announcement at the time. He finished in the dark from memory.

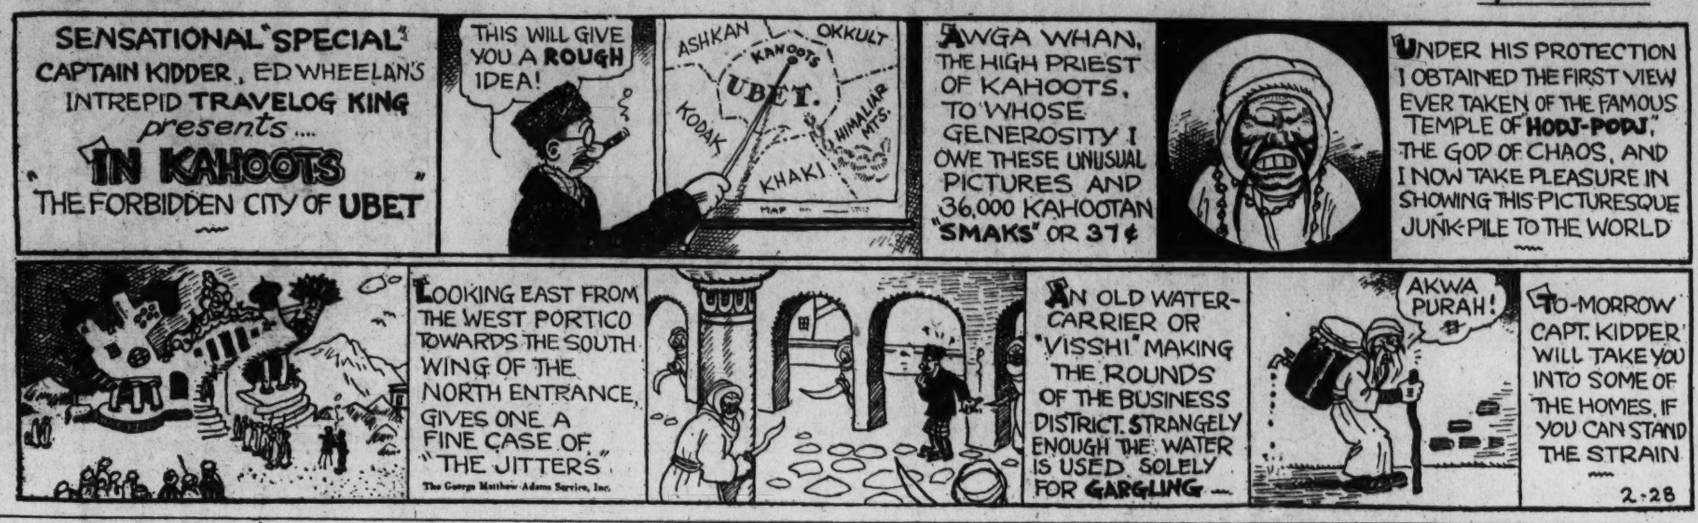
"Some Movie Personalities I Have Known" might be the title of Cinema Critic Nelson Bell's broadcast on The Post program this morning. That it isn't the actual title is due merely to Mr. Bell's aversion for titles. Cinema critics do get sensitive. At any rate, Mr. Bell will tell you of some of the stage and screen people he has met, proceeding to a WJSV microphone at 10 a. m.

Raymond Knight and his Cuckoos, to us the least tiring of all radio comedy organizations, have been scheduled for a series of half-hour Wednesday night shows beginning March 21. All the old Cuckoos will be there—Mrs. Pennyfeather, Mary (the real) McCoy, Jack Arthur and Sally Belle Cox. Robert Armbruster, an orchestra and The Sparklers, a male quartet, will be the other component parts of the program.

In behalf of the National Federation of Professional and Business Women's Clubs' drive to put 10,000 "white collar" women back to work, Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt will speak over Columbia from WJSV Saturday, March 17. It will be a part of National Business Women's week.

Minute Movies

By Ed Wheelan



Adele Ronson (Wilma) and Curtis Arnall (Buck) inspect Dr. Huer's new rocket gun, which is a pretty handy thing to have when running around Mars, as anyone knows who has heard Columbia's Buck Rogers programs.

The Lead Against a Slam.

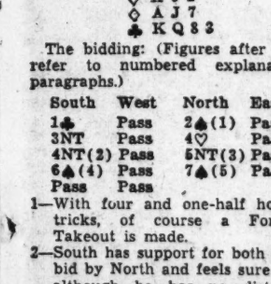
Unquestionably one of the most difficult problems for a Bridge player to decide is the correct lead against a Slam. Often the success or failure of the contract rests entirely upon the choice of a suit, and sometimes a card in the suit, made by the Opening leader. It is difficult indeed, to lay down any general principles governing the selection of a lead, particularly when the contract is one to take all the tricks, as then the chance of successful defense must, if the bidding has been at all accurate, be remote indeed. However, it can be stated with certainty that probably the worst lead against a Slam is a singleton trump. Even if the eventual Dummy's hand has supported the Declarer's trump suit, there still remains the possibility that the partner of the leader may have something in the suit that may develop into a trick if the Declarer himself has to develop the trumps.

A hand in which the lead of a singleton trump presented the Declarer with a Grand Slam contract occurred in one of the early rounds of the Grand National championship match of the United States Bridge Association.

The hand was:

South, Dealer.

North and South vulnerable.



The bidding: (Figures after bids refer to numbered explanatory paragraphs.)

South	West	North	East
1♣	Pass	2♠(1)	Pass
3NT	Pass	4♡	Pass
4NT(2)	Pass	5NT(3)	Pass
6♠(4)	Pass	7♠(5)	Pass
Pass	Pass

1—With four and one-half honor-tricks, of course a Forcing Takeout is made.

2—South has support for both suits bid by North and feels sure that although he has no distributional values the hand must produce a Slam.

3—Showing the remaining Aces.

4—South does not wish to bid the Grand Slam directly and now supports spades in preference to hearts as the stronger suggestion to his partner to bid again if he holds any additional values.

5—North should now bid seven hearts, knowing his partner to have the Ace; but he feels sure of the solidity of the spade suit. Since he holds an additional Slam value—namely, the Ace of clubs, the suit first bid by his partner—he is justified in bidding seven, since this apparently assures a place to discard a losing heart in case that suit should not break.

East, it must be admitted, had a rather difficult choice of leads. However, there was no excuse for the lead which he chose—namely, the spade Ten. With this hint as to the possible unfavorable distribution of the trump suit, the Declarer played the Queen from Dummy and followed with the nine. West did not cover, and North, still playing the hunch given him by the bad lead, played the four. The lead of the last spade from Dummy now permitted the Declarer to avoid the loss of a trick in the trump suit.

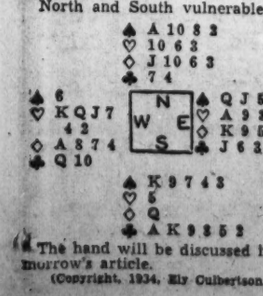
North, it will be observed, would have been defeated with any other lead as, after the play of the Queen of spades and the King of spades, it would have been too late to finesse against West's Knave, as West would have covered the nine, and the seven of trumps would have become the setting trick.

Tomorrow's Hand.

If South opens the bidding with one club, what is West's best Over-call?

South, Dealer,

North and South vulnerable.



The hand will be discussed in tomorrow's article.

Walt Mason, Himself

The Sufferer

I saw a woman weeping outside the county jail; her briny tears were seeping from eyes that seemed to quail; 'twas plain her heart was breaking, if not already broke, and all her nerves were aching beneath her threadbare cloak. Her children stood behind her, some four or five were there; their sobs could but remind her of sorrow and despair. And so I asked the jailer her troubles to relate; "Why does this stricken wailer stand weeping at the gate?" Why is this woman keening, as Rachel did of old? What is the hidden meaning of all I now behold? Why are the children sobbing in their abysmal woe? What vandal has been robbing the kids, I'd like to know?" "The woman's husband's seated in yonder cozy cell," the jailor said, quite heated, "and feeling very well. He lately was convicted of large embezzlements, but he is not afflicted, he doesn't care ten cents. He sits around here reading large books that treat of crime, and while the hours go speeding he has a bully time. With wholesome grub provided, a couch on which to sleep, and by his lawyers guided, why should he sigh or weep? Thus is the wicked duffer immune to smarts and stings; his wife and children suffer, while he but smiles and sings. The innocent are weeping, we always hear them wail, while guilty ones are keeping high wassail in the jail."

DICK TRACY — Deciphering Ashes

TRACY HAS DECIDED HE MUST RECOVER THE ASHES OF THE CHARRED RAILROAD TICKET AND DECIPHER THE DESTINATION THEREON IF HE IS TO FURTHER PIERCE THE MYSTERY OF THE OIL TANK TRAGEDY
BUT HOW CAN YOU UNFOLD THOSE ASHES ENOUGH TO READ WHAT'S ON 'EM, TRACY?
I'LL SHOW YOU PAT.
I WON'T ATTEMPT TO UNFOLD THE ASHES. I SIMPLY PICK UP EACH FRAGMENT OF THE BURNED TICKET AND LAY IT ON THIS PLATE OF GLASS LIKE THIS
20 MINUTES LATER
AND NOW THAT THE FRAGMENTS ARE ALL LAID ON THE GLASS WE'LL CLAP THIS OTHER PIECE OF GLASS ON TOP SO THAT THE ASHES ARE BETWEEN THE TWO AND CAN'T FLY AROUND OR GET LOST.
NOW WE'LL TAKE THIS TO TOWN AND PHOTOGRAPH THE ASHES WITH MY SPECIAL ENLARGING CAMERA AFTER WHICH WE'LL CUT OUT THE JIG-SAW PIECES FROM THE PHOTO AND PUT THEM ALL TOGETHER THEN WE CAN READ THE TICKET

Wrecked Train Yields Bodies Of 9 Victims

Bodies of Enginemen Are Recovered; 36 Hurt in Disaster.

Pittsburgh, Feb. 27 (AP).—Nine dead was the toll tonight in the wreck of an Akron-Pittsburgh train that hu led itself from an overhead bridge last night and crumpled into a mass of scrap iron on the street below.

Shearing away the steel of the locomotive with torches, rescue crews late today came upon the last two bodies, those of the engineer and fireman of the ill-fated "No. 1638."

Seven other bodies had been taken from the smashed coaches. One of them is still unidentified.

Thirty-six persons were injured and more than 20 remain in hospitals.

Three minutes before it was due in the Northside Station of the Pennsylvania Railroad last night, the train shot off the tracks, smashed a signal tower, tore away a corner of a building and plunged into the street.

The Dead.

An unidentified Negro woman.

Railroad officials say they do not know the cause of the wreck.

Fire trucks and police cars hurried fro mall parts of the city. Dazed and scarcely aware of the catastrophe many of the passengers crawled out into the snow-filled streets in scanty clothing.

A dozen priests and clergymen climbed through the tangled debris to give what aid they could.

Scituate, Mass. (U.P.).—A bird known as the dovekie, belonging to the auk family and rarely seen in this part of the world, was found by Mr. and Mrs. John Ketterer. Usually inhabiting the far north, its presence in the temperate zone was attributed to the extreme cold weather.

Tourist Robbed of Shoes.

Milwaukee (U.P.).—Upon returning from a month's visit to Mexico, Mrs. Helen Raab, socially prominent here, said that during her trip she had been robbed of her shoes and stockings by a band of 40 bandits who, the next day, killed the mayor of Guadalajara, Mex.

Picked Wrong House.

Dr. Wynekoop Killed for Gain, State Contends

Witness Supply Financial Motive for Death of Daughter-in-Law.

Chicago, Feb. 27 (AP).—Into the background of her trial for murder today the State etched a picture of Dr. Alice Lindsay Wynekoop, hard pressed for payment of notes and obligations, begging for more time from her creditors.

State witnesses thus supplied a motive the prosecution desired for the slaying of her daughter-in-law, Rheta—the realization of her life insurance policies.

Then the State presented the testimony of a physician that Rheta died not from chloroform but from a bullet wound.

Defense Attorney W. W. Smith failed to shake the testimony of Dr. Thomas L. Dwyer, former coroner's physician.

With the presentation of Dr. Dwyer's testimony, the State neared completion of its case against the 63-year-old physician. Tomorrow morning the defense was expected to call its first witnesses.

Prosecutor Charles S. Dougherty asked Dr. Dwyer whether the bullet was fired before or after the girl was dead.

"The bullet was fired while the individual was alive," said Dr. Dwyer.

Through his testimony the State prepared the way for arguing that the statement of Dr. Wynekoop, later repudiated, that she fired a bullet into Rheta's body after the girl had succumbed to an overdose of chloroform was true in part. The State will insist, however, that the bullet was fired before the chloroform had a lethal effect.

Boulder Dam Far Ahead of Schedule

"It Won't Be Long Now," Is Engineers' Greeting.

Boulder City, Nev. (U.P.).—Boulder Dam, a dream in the minds of engineers and officials for years, is approaching that stage of construction where the password of those associated in its building is: "It won't be long now!"

The giant structure now is past the 740-foot level in Black Canyon. Less than 500 feet of concrete remain to be added to its height before it reaches its top at the 1,232-foot level.

The construction is far ahead of the schedule laid down when the project was started in April, 1931. Major activity now is centered on pouring concrete for the dam.

Scaffolding such as that used on the face of a growing skyscraper covers the dam. In fact, the entire project now resembles construction of some tremendous office building equal in height to the Woolworth Building. Corridors penetrate the huge mass of concrete, from its 650-foot wide base to its ascending top. Galleries thread off the main entrance, some of them to be kept open after the dam is completed.

"AN EYE TO THE FUTURE — AN EAR TO THE GROUND"

—this describes General Motors' policy, a policy by which the public is given what it wants in better cars year after year, and yet is safely protected against ill-timed or dubious experiments

On the dotted lines of dealers' order books is being written the public's notion of the fashionable 1934 motor car.

From where we stand it certainly looks as if General Motors had scored another bull's-eye.

If our 1934 streamline designs have hit the very centerpoint of public favor, as seems clear, we are glad and grateful.

And we want to give credit where credit is due.

The truth is, the people of America helpfully told us well in advance just about what they wanted.

Through the world's largest automotive dealer organization, through replies to more than a million letters of inquiry we sent last year to motorists, we got the story.

It was priceless guidance in shaping into mature and beautiful form the lessons we had learned in streamlining over a period of years.

And it enabled us to hit the target on streamlining in our 1934 cars as we hit it on No-Draft Ventilation and Knee-Action Wheels.

The three outstanding advancements in modern automobiles — NO DRAFT VENTILATION, KNEE-ACTION WHEELS, STREAMLINE DESIGN — are each and all General Motors contributions!

This medallion commemorates the twenty-fifth anniversary of General Motors and of its public-minded interest in the advancement of motor transportation
